Guatemala to ask for renewed military aid

United Press International
GUATEMALA CITY — Henry Kissinger arrived in Guatemala Thursday where the new head of state was waiting to ask for renewed U.S. military aid and greatly expanded economic assistance.

National Palace for talks with chief of state, Gen. Oscar Humberto Mejia Victores.

Arriving at the National Palace, Kissinger said the talks would center "on the desire of cooperation between Guatemala and the United States."

Guatemala is the fourth stop on the Kissinger Commission's six-country swing through war-torn Central America to look into local conditions in order to write a final report to President Reagan recommending long-term U.S. goals.

"Our task is to report to President Reagan and our Congress on what can be done to better the situation in this country," said Kissinger, a former Secretary of State.

The commission was greeted at the palace by Mejia, who took power Aug. 8 in Guatemala's second military coup in 17 months, ousting another general, Efraim Rios Montt.

Under tight security, Kissinger and 30 other people, including nine members of the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America, went to the immediately asked for aid with the United States. The Guatemalan newspaper El Grafico published what was the probable five-point agenda that Mejia would discuss with the commission, including a summary of Guatemala's economic straits and the fight against leftist rebels.

Mejia is expected to make a plea for renewed military aid and for more economic assistance as well as tell the commission about the revival of the Guatemalan military alliance known as Condeca.

Police disperse anti-American demonstrators

Missiles protested in West Germany

United Press International
BREMERHAVEN, West Germany — Riot police used water cannons Thursday to disperse thousands of anti-American demonstrators who tried to blockade a U.S. Army supply depot to protest deployment of new U.S. nuclear missiles in West Germany.

The clash opened a 10-day campaign of civil disobedience, rallies, marches, demonstrations and blockades to halt the introduction by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization of U.S. cruise and Pershing-2 medium range missiles. They are scheduled to be deployed at the end of this year if no agreement is reached in the Soviet-U.S. nuclear arms talks in Geneva.

Five thousand police dispersed the demonstrators to keep roads open to the vital North Sea harbor at Bremerhaven and the headquarters of the U.S. Army's Sea Lift Command, one of the largest American supply depots in Western Europe.

Police carried away 1,000 protesters, who sat in the road to block traffic. About 250 demonstrators were taken into custody but all were released after their identities were checked, police said.

The demonstrators — police said they numbered 3,000, but anti-nuclear organizers claimed 6,000 — managed to slow traffic into the army base and the harbor through which most supplies pass for the 260,000 American service people in West Germany. Traffic never was stopped completely.

Police used three water cannons to disperse 150 demonstrators blocking a road to the harbor so a convoy of 35 German trucks could enter it.

Although the Bremerhaven demonstration was generally peaceful except for the brief use of water cannons, police spokesman Ekehard Naumann told reporters earlier there had been reports of 300 extremists, some of them armed, going to the port from West Berlin and other cities.

Similar demonstrations were planned Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the U.S. Air Force's European headquarters at Ramstein Air Base, outside Kaiserslautern, and Saturday at the U.S. Army's Andrews Barracks in West Berlin.

A spokeswoman for the anti-missile movement told a Bonn news conference 3 million people will take part in the country-wide demonstrations.

Walter V. Tiesenhuisen, spokesman for Chancellor Helmut Kohl's Christian Democrats, denounced the blockades as illegal and said they were designed to create the impression the American Army is in hostile territory.

Japanese demonstrators protest 'shadow shogun'

United Press International
TOKYO — Some 350,000 angry Japanese took to the streets throughout Japan Wednesday to denounce the "corruption" of former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, but the "shadow shogun" vowed to fight his conviction in the $2.2 million Lockheed bribery scandal.

The demonstrators, many calling for "an end to money politics," demanded Tanaka resign from Parliament. But Tanaka immediately filed an appeal, said he would remain in office and promised to battle for vindication if it took a decade.

The verdict against Tanaka, who was given a four-year term and a fine equaling the bribe paid by the American airplane manufacturer, was a major blow to Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone's pro-American government.

Nakasone, who came to power last November thanks to the backing of the faction Tanaka controls in the ruling Liberal Democratic Party, said he would not dissolve the Diet or Parliament, whose term runs until next June.

But political sources said Nakasone was likely to see the work of the Diet come to a standstill while the ruling party fought off what was expected to be a burgeoning opposition attempt to oust Tanaka from the legislature.

Tanaka noted it took "only" six years and nine months for the legal process to produce Wednesday's conviction and vowed: "I will fight for another 10 years."

An opposition bill urging Tanaka's resignation from Parliament is pending but has been stalled by the ruling party, which holds a majority.

Some 350,000 people throughout Japan demonstrated in support of Tanaka's ouster from Parliament, including about 30,000 who staged a noisy anti-Tanaka rally in Tokyo to welcome the ruling by the Tokyo District Court.

Opposition politicians delivered street speeches denouncing "corruption in LDP politics."

Tanaka himself quashed any chance of the fallout from Japan's biggest political scandal finally dissipating.

Released on bail of $1.3 million, he immediately lodged an appeal with the Tokyo High Court, whose rulings can be appealed to Japan's Supreme Court.

Meanwhile, the 65-year-old politician said, "I intend to devote myself to performing my duties as a Diet member."

The court's three-man panel accepted prosecution arguments that Tanaka in 1973 accepted a bribe from Lockheed and used his authority as prime minister to pressure All Nippon Airways to buy Lockheed's L-1011 TriStar planes.

The domestic airline bought 20 of the wide-bodied aircraft between 1974 and 1978. The California-based Lockheed Corp. had no comment on the case.

Tanaka, convicted for bribery 35 years ago in a verdict that was later quashed on appeal, was the first prime minister indicted for a criminal charge while in office.
