Court tackles NCAA TV football

United Press International
WASHINGTON — The NCAA Monday won Supreme Court review of its multimillion-dollar broadcasting deal with the television networks, assuring that televised Saturday college football games will continue this fall as scheduled.

A lower court had invalidated the agreement on grounds it is anti-competitive, since it reduces the number of games offered to TV viewers nationwide.

NCAA rules restrict participating schools to six appearances every two years. Each broadcast can net a school up to $600,000, plus the attendant national publicity.

The University of Oklahoma and the University of Georgia, perennial football powerhouses, challenged the arrangement because it prevents them from cutting more lucrative deals for their high-profile teams.

Last July, Justice Byron White, one-time All-America halfback, issued an order allowing the National Collegiate Athletic Association to continue its negotiated broadcast schedule until the case is settled. A high court decision is unlikely until sometime next year.

In its Supreme Court appeal, the NCAA argued that "more than football is at stake" if the lower court ruling is left alone. It could affect "almost every successful professional sport (that) has pooled and sold TV rights as a package to one or more networks."

The NCAA's contracts with the networks involve $74.3 million in payments in 1983, and affect audiences of up to 22.5 million for each game broadcast.

The athletic association, composed of 785 member colleges and 100 athletic conferences, has contracts with ABC and CBS to telecast 14 afternoon games each fall, and with Turner Broadcasting System to show 19 evening games.

ABC spokesman Don Bernstein said the court's decision to hear the case "did not come as a surprise, given White's comments earlier in the year."

"It could have an impact on the selling of '84 games," Bernstein said.

Mark Carlson, a spokesman for CBS, said the network will "await a decision by the court for our plans for next year."

Andy Coats, a lawyer for the University of Oklahoma, said that courts have said, "Well, gee, it (the NCAA TV package) must be OK because its been around a long time and the NCAA is a good group."

Faulkner opposing coal plant

United Press International
AUSTIN — A group opposing the city's investment in a lignite coal operation called on a list of entertainers, including humorist John Henry Faulkner, to help raise funds to defeat the ballot issue.

Faulkner, who joined the political fray and opposed Rep. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, after the Bryan-College Station congressman resigned last winter and switched parties, was to serve as master of ceremonies at the Monday night rally at the Soap Creek Saloon.

Organizers said other entertainers at the gathering would include musicians Steve Fromholz and Bill Oliver.

The city is asking voters to approve an $803.4 million bond package Saturday, which includes $583 for a lignite-fueled power plant in Fayette County and an associated strip mining operation.
