in equality, says King

WASHINGTON — Coretta Scott King said Thursday she considered it an insult when President Reagan expressed doubts about the newly passed bill to establish a holiday honoring her late husband.

"It's hard for me to see that someone like that really believes cin equality," King said in an in-terview with United Press Inter-inational. "What kind of America does he want it to be? He doesn't represent America.'

The Senate voted 78-22 Wednesday to approve legisla-tion designating Martin Luther King Jr. Day as the third Mon-tribute to the slain civil rights whelmingly voted for the bill."

But Reagan said he would have preferred an informal observance for King. He also said he was sympathetic to Sen. Jesse Helms' demand that sealed records of 1960s FBI wiretaps of King be divulged.

"He had a great opportunity to be a statesperson," King said. "He didn't have to say what he

"It's been so obvious (since) his election that he has systematically ignored the concerns of black people," she said. "And then to top it all off, to insult us that the has systematically ignored the concerns of black people," she said. "And then to top it all off, to insult us with the statement he made yes-

Helms has said the FBI documents, sealed by court order for 50 years beginning in 1977, would show King was influenced by communism.

Asked if he agreed with the North Carolina senator, Reagan said, "We'll know in about 35 years, won't we?'

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., called Reagan's remarks

King has lobbied for the holiday bill ever since it was intro-duced in Congress 15 years ago, shortly after her husband was assassinated at the age of 39 in Memphis, Tenn., in 1968.

Reagan doesn't believe Nominee for EPA water programs pledges access

United Press International WASHINGTON — President Reagan's nominee to head the EPA's water programs pledged Thursday to give critics of ocean burning of toxic wastes the same access to agency documents as proponents of the plan. Jack Ravan, the Environ-mental Protection Agency's assistant administratordesignate for water, told Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said he knew nothing about charges that proponents of ocean incineration of toxic wastes had fuller access to records than opponents. Bentsen said there was considerable public controversy in Brownsville because of the issuance recently of two permits to allow burning at sea of toxic wastes, including PCBs.

Yes, sir," Ravan replied after Bentsen asked if Ravan would allow equal access to agency documents to all sides in the controversy.

'I know nothing about the allegations, but that's not any way to run the office," Ravan said during a public hearing by the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee concerning his nomination.

Bentsen said EPA "should have just as tough requirements for ocean incineration as land incineration" of toxic ta and former administrative aide to Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., said he did not know if the same scrubbers used on smoke stacks during the burning of toxic wastes should be required on smoke stacks at sea. "There may be some good reason for not doing so," Ravan said.

He promised to involve himself in further considera-tion of the public comment and hearing process before a final policy on ocean incineration of toxic wastes is made.

'My commitment is to assist in the clean up, protection, and making safe for consumption, waters of the United States," he said.
