Def Leppard boycott encouraged by LULAC

United Press International
EL PASO — The Texas executive council of the League of United Latin American Citizens has voted to continue a statewide boycott against the British rock group Def Leppard until Dec. 31, but a movement is growing among the band's fans to end the protest sooner, officials said Monday.

The apology, saying Hispanics would not be "bought off." Mona said the high school youth already have 1,000 signatures and are determined to get the rest. She said she knows Elliott is upset about the incident.

"Cheech Marin, a Mexican-American, and Tommy Chong, a Chinese American, are always poking fun at themselves and others," Miss Mona said. "Joe Elliott thought he was being playful, but now he realizes the big error he made."

Def Leppard's lead singer Joe Elliott raised the ire of Hispanics when he referred to El Paso in a recent concert as "that place with all the greasy Mexicans."

"Elliott's girlfriend, Denise Dakin, wrote me from London to tell me how bad Joe feels that he offended people," Mona said.

Mona said she did not think Mayor Rogers has the right to decide for El Paso citizens which performing artists will or will not be welcomed in the city.

Mayor Jonathan Rogers joined with LULAC in boycotting the group, refusing to accept Elliott's apology.

Part of the problem stems from Elliott's appreciation for the comedy team of "Cheech and Chong," she said.

Loya said many students do not understand Elliott's remark. Youth do not always have the same value as adults, he said.

LULAC District Director Joe Loya said the 17 district directors from throughout Texas, meeting in Houston over the weekend, voted to continue the boycott of Def Leppard music, T-shirts and other products.

Elliott offered to fly to El Paso and make a personal apology for his remark and said he would donate $10,000 to El Paso's needy children. Loya refused.

National Forest Service cuts pines to kill beetles

United Press International
WASHINGTON — The National Forest Service is cutting down thousands of east Texas pine trees to stop a devastating southern pine beetle outbreak it probably should have moved to control sooner, an agency official said Monday.

"Although substantial progress in containing the outbreak has been achieved, it is critical that control operations continue uninterrupted throughout the fall and winter months to remove beetle-infested trees from the forest," said Housely.

animals, 22 champion trees and scenic vistas unmatched in the world.

The pesky insect devastates pine trees by boring through the bark and sucking the sap, eventually killing the tree before moving on to other trees.

Bryant's bill would stop timber cutting in three tracts in the Angelina National Forest north of Lufkin, two in Davy Crockett near Cleveland, two in the Sabine National Forest on the Texas-Louisiana border and three — including Four Notch — in the Sam Houston National Forest.

Four Notch is one of 10 areas comprising 65,000 acres that Rep. John Bryant, a Democrat from Dallas, wants set aside as wilderness. His bill, which he says would amount to less than one-half of 1 percent of potential timber area in the state, has the support of several conservation groups and newspapers in east Texas.

Housely, however, said the administration supports a bill by Rep. Charles Wilson, a Lufkin Democrat and former lumberyard manager, to designate only 8,790 acres in Sam Houston, Davy Crockett and Angelina national forests as wilderness.

"These 65,000 acres I am proposing for wilderness designation are among the most unusual and beautiful areas in our east Texas woodland," said Bryant. "They are diverse and distinctive, containing vanishing ecosystems, rare and endangered species of plants and

Wilson contends ending timber sales in the proposed areas would reduce the amount of receipts going to counties for schools and roads, affect jobs and deprive the physically handicapped of access to the areas.

Raymond Housely, deputy forest service chief, said the agency is simply trying to control the beetle in the proposed wilderness area in order to protect nearby public and private timber interests — and would local have the authority to so even if it was set aside in its natural state. "In assessing the course of events in the Four Notch area, I could conclude that we took necessary control action but did not move fast enough," Housely said.

"The most difficult thing a politician must contend with is appearing to be on the wrong side of motherhood and apple pie," said Wilson.

"In April of this year, the installation in the Four Notch area as 10 acres in size," he said. "It now over 2,000 acres."

Critics say the pine beetles are ramping the clear-cut 250-foot buffer areas and the service's own technical bulletins say such cutting after Sept. 30 prompts the spread of the beetle. Housely said the program must continue.
