Area folk festival to open Saturday

The Doctor's Office in Bryan is planning a folk festival to be held downtown Saturday. The focus of the festival is an exchange of cultural customs and traditions from a generous cross-section of cultures around the world. Several community organizations, churches and student organizations will participate.

The feature presentation will be an educational miniseres on herbal medicine traditions of different cultures — including such areas as the border, the hill country and East Texas by Dr. Clarissa Kimber. Other features of the festival will be street minstrels, vendors and craftsmen with foods and products from around the world, medicinal herbs, tarot readings and ethnic music and costumes.

The street fair will be held in downtown Bryan on 26th Street. Admission is free.

DAV benefits explained Saturday

Detailed explanations of the full range of benefits available to disabled veterans and their families will be presented in an open meeting Saturday, at the American Legion Post Home on East Highway 21 at Waco Street in Bryan. The meeting, presented by Chapter 200 of the Disabled American Veterans, will begin at 10:30 a.m.

At the meeting, trained veterans' benefits experts — a DAV National Service officer, the assistant state veterans employment representative, and a representative of the Texas Veterans Land Board — will be present to discuss benefits, answer questions and provide assistance.

The meeting is free and open to anyone interested.

Course focuses on business careers

A new course, "Careers in Business Administration," is opening in the spring for freshmen and sophomores who want to learn more about potential professional opportunities in business fields. The one hour credit course is especially designed for students in general studies, liberal arts or other fields who are considering business careers or combined fields of study.

Temple Freda named Historic Place

Temple Freda in Bryan has been named to the National Register of Historic Places. Nominated for the list by the Texas Historical Commission, this important Brazos County site is formally recognized for its architectural and religious significance to the area.

Temple Freda was built in 1912, and its Classical Revival architecture represents one of the two prevailing fashions in the design of early 20th century Texas synagogues. Hebrew synagogues were not numerous in Texas at this date, and Jews living within a radius of 100 miles came to Temple Freda to worship.

It is one of 800 Texas sites included in the National Register of Historic Places. Created by the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966, the Register is a nationwide inventory of those properties especially worthy of preservation for their archeological, historical or architectural significance.

Heineken kidnappers demand news blackout, halt to search

United Press International
AMSTERDAM, Netherlands — Authorities yielded Thursday to a demand from the kidnappers of Freddie Heineken for a news blackout following a threat to kill the multimillionaire beer baron if police did not halt their investigation.

Heineken, 60, head of the brewery started by his grandfather, was abducted along with his chauffeur Wednesday evening by three hooded gunmen outside his office in the heart of the city.

Brewery spokesman Robert Elfrink said a letter to police in The Hague was the first communication from the kidnappers.

"In the letter, the kidnappers demanded that no further statements should be made to the media," he said.

"In the interests of the victims, Heineken and the police have decided to accept the demand," Elfrink said. "No further information can be released concerning the timing or the content of the message."

"In the interests of the victims, Heineken and the police have decided to accept the demand."

He said the kidnappers had promised to make contact with Heineken Breweries and that the company was willing to buy its chairman's release but declined to say whether a ransom was mentioned.

Earlier, in a telephone call to the Rotterdam Algemeen Dagblad newspaper, a man claiming to represent the kidnappers said Heineken and his chauffeur would be killed if police did not immediately halt their search. Police and company spokesmen declined comment on the threat.

Heineken was snatched by three hooded gunmen as he walked to his car from his office overlooking the 120-year-old Heineken brewery. His chauffeur, Ab Doderer attempted to rescue his employer, but was hit on the head and both were bundled into a truck.

Police asked a taxi driver who reported the incident by radio to give chase until a squad car could take over.

The driver, Fred Wuyts, 32, with a passenger in his car, followed the truck until it stopped a few minutes later while the kidnappers transferred their captives to a waiting car. Wuyts said he drove away when a gunman threatened to shoot him.

Heineken controls one of the most successful family concerns in the world with markets in 160 countries, including the United States, where it is the top-selling foreign brand of beer, with annual earnings estimated at $1.3 billion.

The yeast culture recipe Heineken's grandfather used when he founded the brewery in 1864 is kept in a company safe.

A close friend of the Dutch royal family, Heineken maintains luxury homes in Switzerland and France. He married the former Lucille Cummins, of Louisville, Ky., during a 1948 visit to the United States — the first foreign market he tackled as he rose to control the fourth largest brewery in the world — and they have one daughter.
