Models have wholesome look

United Press International
DALLAS — Early next year advertisers who are tired of sexy models will have a chance to replace them with straight-laced, wholesome ones.

Christian Models U.S.A. is the brainchild of adman Lon Dorsey, whose connections with the large evangelical community in Dallas convinced him there is both a supply and demand for modeling and stagecraft that avoids the lustful.

"Christian Models U.S.A. is an opportunity for people who would like to be in modeling to work in the industry without compromising their moral standards," Dorsey said.

An active Protestant layman, Dorsey, 38, plans for his agency to become a division of his public relations firm. Though not large, (it has averaged about 60 billings annually since Dorsey formed it five years ago), his firm has handled such clients as WBC heavyweight champion Larry Holmes.

He is convinced they are weary of "one more little snazzy rock 'n roll commercial, one more sexual gimmick. The world really has this stuff crammed down their throat when they're not asking for it."

As proof, Dorsey points to "a secular film producer who is head-over-heels about what we're doing" and has agreed to buy space in the agency's directory of approximately 100 models Dorsey plans to publish early next year.

Those who see Dorsey's work will see something different, indeed something less, than they might view in other ads. Neither male nor female models, for example, will appear in bathing suits.

Other requirements for aspiring or experienced models who choose Dorsey's agency include a one-time filing fee of $25, a $165 fee for a place in the directory and, for those without a portfolio, a $100 photography fee.

The directory, for which his employees are selling ads, will be issued in January to businesses, radio and television stations, advertising agencies, newspapers, magazines, trade publications and film and photography studios, he said.

"The overall purpose of CMUSA is to infiltrate the modeling industry with the Word, God's people, God's power, God's principles and with God's presence," he wrote to one large independent church with a high-budget broadcasting operation.

Though not widely known in Texas, Dorsey first came into public view in 1976 when he published "Soccer Today" and in 1977 when he published "Hockey Today" and handled public relations for the now-defunct Dallas Black Hawks professional hockey franchise.
