

FBI experts say killer is neighborhood kook

United Press International
FORT WAYNE, Ind. — The killing of Jane Osborne, her husband and their son was committed by a neighborhood oddball who gets out mostly at night, FBI psychology experts speculate.

The FBI behavioral experts based at Quantico, Va., gave Fort Wayne police a personality profile of the possible killer of Dan Osborne, 35, editorial page editor of the Fort Wayne News-Sentinel; his wife, Jane, 34; and their son, Ben, 11. The three were beaten to death in their home and discovered Sept. 19. The analysis, released Wednesday, presumably was based on police information sent to the FBI. The report places the deaths on Sept. 16 or 17.

Fort Wayne Police Chief David Riemen said Wednesday police have no suspect matching the FBI profile.

The experts described the slayer as an "inadequate, introverted individual who lives or works within comfortable walking distance of the crime scene." It said: "He is of average to slightly below average intelligence, and has not progressed educationally beyond high school. He is a white male, 21-27 years old, average in stature; his appearance is sloppy, since he does not take pride in his manner of dress or appearance."

The report said police might look for somebody who has committed "nuisance" offenses such as disorderly conduct, window peeping, thefts of shoes or undergarments or minor offenses against animals and children.

The analysis carries the disclaimers that it is no substitute for a thorough investigation and "should not be considered all-inclusive."

The report also said: "The information provided is based on reviewing, analyzing and researching criminal cases similar to the case submitted by the requesting agency."

It said the analysis was based upon probabilities, but noted "no two criminal acts or criminal personalities are exactly alike and, therefore, the offender may not always fit the profile in every category."

Evaluating the crime scene, the report said: "This offense is an extremely disorganized and sloppy crime. The crime scene also reflects a great amount of rage, anger and hostility on the part of the offender, directed primarily at Jane Osborne."

That comment conflicted with a police analysis that indicated she became the victim of a loud and prolonged attack when she surprised an intruder who already had killed her husband and son.

"The offender appears to have had no single specific motive," the report said. It added that the killing wasn't "a planned, well thought-out and precisely executed" one.

Mayor pleads for help for cities with refugees

United Press International
NEW ORLEANS — The United States, a "haven for the homeless and oppressed," should provide financial aid to cities that receive refugees who are welcomed by the federal government, Mayor Ernest Morial said.

"We feel we have done our part in finding out how these new residents need to be integrated in our community, but the federal government has not done its part," Morial said.

Morial claimed the federal government's abandonment of resettled refugees is forcing cities to divert scarce resources from education, police, medical services, job training and placement, and recreation.

Cities and schools need direct federal grants and a comprehensive immigration policy for refugees, he said during a panel discussion Tuesday at the 60th annual National League of Cities convention.

"The answer is not to seal our borders," Morial said. "Since our country's inception, the United States has advanced itself as a haven for the homeless and oppressed. Moreover, the conditions in the undeveloped world that encourage individuals to migrate are real, fragile and bleak."

Councilwoman Maria Berriozabel of San Antonio said the immigration issue did not surface overnight.

"Between 80,000 and 100,000 Mexicans remained in Texas after the Mexican War and they did not cross the border — the border crossed them," she said.

Berriozabel, noting the number of illegal aliens in the United States has been estimated at 500,000 to 12 million, said the immigration issue is an emotional one, often influenced by the economy.

Rick Swartz, president of National Immigration, Naturalization and Citizenship Forum, said state and county officials should participate in national debates on immigration.

"Right now, 50 percent of population growth is attributable to immigration," Texas said. "And in 40 to 50 years more than 50 percent of population will be non-white."

"You have to get a handle on the facts and make sure the people making decisions are aware of them with all the available information."

Employer held liable for drinking driver

United Press International
AUSTIN — The Texas Supreme Court Wednesday allowed the husbands of two women killed by a drunk driver to proceed with a lawsuit against the man's employer, who failed to stop the intoxicated worker from trying to drive home.

Larry and Clifford Clark filed suit against Otis Engineering Corp. of Dallas after their wives were killed in an automobile accident. The accident was caused by Otis employee Robert Matheson, who drank the equivalent of as many as 25 cocktails during an evening work shift before being ordered home.

Court depositions showed Matheson's supervisor ordered the drunk worker to go home after he returned from a dinner break. The accident, in which Matheson also died, occurred three miles from the Otis office about 30 minutes later.

A lower court granted judgment in favor of Otis that was not "in the course of employment" when the accident occurred.

An appeal court reversed the ruling and ordered a retrial of the case. The Supreme Court held Wednesday.

A medical examiner testified Matheson had a blood alcohol level of 0.27 percent when the accident happened — equivalent of 20 to 25 cocktails consumed over two hours.

"Matheson's extreme intoxication was well known to his supervisor and fellow workers," the Supreme Court said in its ruling. "The testimony indicated the supervisor knew Matheson was in no condition to drive home safely that night."
