

Snead leading tourney

United Press International

PHOENIX, Ariz. — J.C. Snead, Corey Pavin and Gary Hallberg fired rounds of 5-under-par 66 Thursday to share the first-round lead in the $400,000 Phoenix Open.

Snead, nephew of golfing legend Sam Snead, carded his 66 over the Phoenix Country Club layout by dropping five birdie putts. The 17-year tour veteran has not won since the 1981 Southern Open, but was 51st on the money list last year with more than $100,000.

Pavin, a tour rookie, moved into a tie for the lead when he scored an eagle-3 on the 18th hole by dropping the ball into the cup with a pitching wedge from 40 feet. He won the 1983 South African PGA and also captured the German Open and the Calberson Classic before joining the PGA tour this year. He also played on the 1981 Walker Cup team while attending UCLA.

Hallberg's 5-under came on six birdies and a bogey.

Ben Crenshaw, Lanny Wadkins, Larry Mize, Russ Cochran, Don Hammond, and Al Geiberger were tied for second at 67, one stroke ahead of a group of 12 that included Johnny Miller, Tom Kite, and Jim Simons.

The start of play was delayed more than one hour as temperatures plunged to 25 degrees during the early morning, freezing the greens. They thawed shortly before 9 a.m. and the field of 144 pros began the opening round.

Temperatures stayed near 50 degrees during the round and the greens were in good condition.

Aggies go Frogging

By BOB CASTER
Senior Sports Writer

Depending on who you talk to, the Texas A&M men's basketball team has either had the worst good showing or the best bad showing of any team in the Southwest Conference since the Christmas holidays.

The Aggies started the year off on the right foot with a five-point win over Rice on Jan. 4. They were only to be stomped three days later in Barnhill Arena by Arkansas. But head coach Shellenby Metcalf was quick to reassemble his youngsters and renew their confidence in themselves in time for badly-needed wins over Angelo State and Baylor. Things seemed to be looking up for the Aggies. Then there was Houston.

All things considered, though, the loss to the Cougars was not in the least way discouraging. In fact it was highly encouraging. What was discouraging was the win over Texas Wesleyan that followed. Not that non-conference wins aren't important, but it helps when a team looks good in winning.

But in their most recent game at SMU, the Aggies looked neither bad in winning nor good in losing — they just got killed.

And now they face TCU's Killer Frogs. Don't laugh, though. Coach Jim Killingsworth's Killer Frogs may have an 0-5 conference record but it's been said that they have potential, which is what most teams with losing records have.

And don't forget the TV factor. Saturday's game will be televised by TVS and broadcast by KCEN-TV, channel 6 in Waco with the tipoff set for 2:10. The last two televised games the Aggies played were against Houston and Arkansas. That in itself is highly reminiscent of A&M's football season — not that people these days would believe in jinxes or anything.

But the Aggies should have their hands full dealing with jinxes of a different sort. Like TCU's Dennis Nutt, the 6-2, 165-pound junior guard, who scored over 30 points twice last week against teams who could in no way be considered lightweights. Nutt hit for 32 points against Arkansas after making a career-high 36 points earlier in the week against Houston.

Women face Hogs, look to even record

The Texas A&M women's basketball team returns to the Rolie White Coliseum to take on Arkansas Saturday night at 7:30 in an effort to even out a 1-2 conference record.

The Aggies are fresh off of a 78-69 romp over SMU in which A&M's leading scorer Lisa Langston and center Michelle Tatum had a combined 56-point scoring effort. Tatum's 28 points made the SMU game her highest scoring game of the season. She also had 17 rebounds against the Ponies.

The team, currently seventh in the Southwest Conference standings in front of Rice and TCU, has three games left in the regular season. Following Arkansas, the Aggies close out their home schedule against top-ranked University of Texas before travelling to Lubbock for their last game of the season against Texas Tech.
