Judge assigned to Chagra case

United Press International

SAN ANTONIO — Jimmy Chagra, charged with conspiring to kill a federal prosecutor, Tuesday laughed in disbelief when told the case was randomly assigned to his old foe — U.S. Judge William Sessions.

U.S. Magistrate Robert B. O'Connor formally charged Chagra and federal prisoner Richard Kearns with conspiracy in the Nov. 21, 1978 attack on assistant U.S. Attorney James Kerr.

O'Connor informed Chagra the case would be heard by Sessions, who sentenced Chagra to 47 years in prison for drug trafficking, income tax evasion and conspiring to obstruct the investigation of the 1979 death of U.S. Judge John Wood Jr.

"Does my name go into a tumbler and a certain judge get my case? How do I get Judge Sessions every time?" Chagra asked O'Connor. "It's supposed to be a random thing. Do judges pick who they want to prosecute?"

Assistant U.S. Attorney Ray Jahn, who conducted the Wood investigation, told the court that Chagra's case was randomly assigned to Sessions.

Chagra laughed skeptically, asking O'Connor, "it was randomly picked?"

Chagra waived his right to have a bond set in the case, and O'Connor granted a request to appoint Las Vegas, Nev., attorney Oscar Goodman as defense counsel. No arraignment date was set.

Kearns, 44, was brought before O'Connor in a separate hearing and charged with conspiracy and assaulting a federal prosecutor.

The indictments alleged that Chagra arranged through an associate, Robert Piccolo, to hire Kearns to kill Kerr, who was investigating Chagra's drug dealing activities.

The indictment said Kearns fired "numerous rounds" from a semi-automatic, .30 caliber rifle at Kerr's car. Kerr escaped serious injury by ducking beneath the dashboard.

Chagra is serving his sentences at the federal prison in Marion, Ill., while Kearns is serving an 18-month sentence in Concord, N.H., for theft from an interstate shipment.

Father shows FBI agents location of child's grave

United Press International

EL PASO — Accused murderer Keith Webb broke down and cried after he led FBI agents to his six-year-old son's shallow grave in the desert.

"There's Stevie," FBI agent David Beiter quoted Webb as saying in trial testimony before U.S. District Judge Harry Lee Hudspeth.

Dr. William Liles, an Army pathologist who examined the boy's remains, testified Monday that the body Webb led agents to was that of Steven Marcel Wilson, and that homicide was the probable cause of death.

Beiter said he and another agent took custody of Webb at the Criminal Investigations Division office at Fort Bliss last Sept. 6.

Agents testified Webb led them to the site of the shallow grave, at a spot in the New Mexico desert, one mile north of the Texas line. They said they saw a portion of an uncovered skull of a human, then the rest of the decomposed remains of a child's body.

On the trip back to El Paso, Webb decided to talk to the agents about the circumstances surrounding the boy's death, Beiter said.

"Webb said that the boy had died about one month before, on Aug. 12, at the residence Webb shared with his wife, June Webb, located at Fort Bliss," the agent said.

"He told us that two or three days before the boy's death, the boy stole something, and to punish him, the boy was put in hot water," Beiter said. "Afterward, he put the boy in bed, and climbed into the bed to console him."

On the day the boy died, Beiter said Webb and the boy were in the house alone when Webb picked up the boy from his bed, where he was lying in a lethargic state, and carried him to the kitchen, where he gave the boy a cookie. The boy fell over dead, the agent quoted Webb as saying.

Webb told agents he wrapped the boy in a blanket, put him in a storage shed at the residence and buried the body later in the week, Beiter said.

Acting as his own lawyer, Webb questioned Beiter as to why it took so long to present him before a magistrate. He said he was taken into police custody on Friday but was not taken before a magistrate until the next day and the criminal complaint against Webb and his wife, June, was not signed until two days later, Sept. 8.
