The reason for the increase is the larger share contributed by the men's basketball team. Groff estimated the team will television revenues of $225,000 by the end of this year. In 1983 the team had about $50,000 in revenues.

Groff also said the department is trying to keep its programs up to date. He said two major projects have been approved that will carry large price tags. Presently, the source of funding has not been decided.

An all purpose running track for the varsity track team was approved in November by the Texas A&M Board of Regents. The new track will be located just west of Olsen Field.

Once the track is completed, the space south of Kyle Field that is now used for the track field events, will be the site of a Physiological Strength and Conditioning Lab. The proposed Strength Lab was approved by the Regents in January.

The Strength Lab will be funded and used by both the Athletic Department and the Health and Physical Education Department.

Pennzoil desires federal injunction in oil merger

United Press International

DENVER — Attorneys for Pennzoil asked a federal appeals court Monday to halt the proposed merger of Texaco and Getty Oil Co., while Texaco continued its plan to complete the merger.

Pennzoil attorney Jay Greenfield filed a motion in the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals asking the court to issue a temporary injunction blocking the merger pending an emergency hearing on the suit.

The appeals court, which received the papers late in the day, did not act immediately on the request.

Texaco, continuing on with its $10.1 billion merger plan, announced earlier in the day that it had extended until 7 p.m. Monday its offer to purchase up to 28 million shares of Getty common for a cash price of $128 a share.

Texaco said it has contracted more than 75.5 million out of Getty Oil's 79.1 million outstanding common shares — or over 95 percent.

Texaco said it has under tender or contract more than 75.5 million out of Getty Oil's 79.1 million outstanding common shares — or over 95 percent.

Pennzoil had sought a preliminary injunction from a judge in Tulsa to stop the record $10.1 billion merger, alleging such a deal would violate antitrust laws. U.S. District Judge James Ellison denied the request Saturday night after six days of testimony.

"We are asking that the appeal be heard this week and that Texaco be enjoined from going ahead with the merger until the appeal is heard," Greenfield said Monday. "We're also asking for a temporary injunction."

"We claim that the judge (Ellison) erred on the law when he ruled that we had not shown any injury, and we pointed out that the judge had expressly said he was not ruling there had been no violation of antitrust laws," Greenfield said.

Ellison said Pennzoil had standing to sue, despite Texaco's contention Pennzoil shared few markets with Texaco.

The merger plan still awaits approval from the Federal Trade Commission. Texaco's announcement also said about 34.5 million shares have been tendered, or 91 percent of the 38 million publicly held common shares of Getty. The tender offer reserves Texaco the right to purchase additional shares up to all shares tendered.

The offer originally was scheduled to expire at midnight Feb. 3.

Texaco said it also has signed stock purchase agreements to acquire approximately 41 million shares of Getty Oil from the J. Paul Getty Museum and the Sarah C. Getty Trust, presently held in escrow.

"We are gratified at the outstanding support which Getty Oil's stockholders have demonstrated for Texaco's offer," said John K. McKinley, Texaco's chairman and chief executive officer.

"It shows that Getty's stockholders regard Texaco's offer as being fair and in their best interests," he said.

"Since we remain confident that there is no antitrust barrier to the acquisition of Getty Oil, we hope to obtain the necessary clearances at an early date to allow prompt purchase of the shares," he said.

Capital punishment favored in debate

In a public debate, sponsored by the Texas A&M debate team, students voted 157-41 in favor of capital punishment.

The topic of Monday's debate was, "Resolved: that capital punishment should be abolished."

Albert Muller, a junior agricultural economics major and public relations seargent for the Corps of Cadets, delivered his speech on the pros of abolishing capital punishment.

"Capital punishment is as fundamentally wrong as a cure for crime as welfare is a cure for poverty," Muller said.

"Nobody has the right to another person's life," Muller said, "capital punishment is not justice."

Capital punishment will not prevent crimes from being committed, Muller said, and his views on capital punishment are strong because of his moral beliefs.

"The rights of man come not from the generosity of the state, but from the hands of God," Muller said.

Pam Pearce, a junior education major, delivered her opposing views on the abolishment of capital punishment.

"It cost more money to keep one man in prison for one year than it would to send that particular person through college for one year," Pearce said. Capital punishment prevents expense on society, she said.

"In interviews submitted to the Supreme Court, inmates on death row said that if they had known they were going to be put to death immediately for their crimes they would have not murdered," Pearce said.

After the opening speeches the debate was opened for public comment.

Pennzoil desires federal injunction in oil merger

A breach of contract suit also has been filed by Pennzoil in a Delaware court alleging Getty agreed to sell stock to Pennzoil, then backed out in favor of Texaco.

Getty President Robert Miller testified in Tulsa that a delay in the merger would cost Getty shareholders $2 million a day because the profits they would invest elsewhere would be delayed.
