Natural food sales rise

United Press International Natural food stores across the nation reported increases in sales of organically grown, pesticide-free food Tuesday as a result of the federal government's ruling on foods containing the cancer-causing chemical EDB.

Supermarket owners in several states said sales of grain goods were down because of the EDB ruling but added it was too early to tell the magnitude of the decline.

The Environmental Protection Agency Friday ruled that EDB, ethylene dibromide, which has been used as a pesticide and has been sprayed on a variety of grain products since 1948, be restricted to maximum levels of 900 parts per billion for raw grains and 30 ppb for ready-to-eat products.

Cooking eliminates up to 90 percent of EDB and has prompted federal officials to recommend lower levels for ready-to-eat products.

The EPA said its guidelines were intended to help each state set its own policy on EDB, which has been shown to be a powerful cancer-causing agent in laboratory animals.

Massachusetts Monday banned the sale of 18 grain-based products containing EDB. The 18 products included eight Duncan Hines cake mixes as well as flour products from a variety of manufacturers.

State agencies were also beginning tests on EDB content in fruits and vegetables and will make the test results known later in the week, officials told UPI.

One Natural foods distributor benefiting from the state ban was Richard Webb, president of Mill River Flour and Grain Inc. in Williamsburg, Mass.

"Some of the stores say they have experienced a two or three hundred percent increase in flour sales," Webb said.

Baby doing well following operation

United Press International HOUSTON — A 7-month-old boy Tuesday was injected with his father's bone marrow in an experimental operation doctors hope will cure him of a rare disease which prevents his body from naturally fighting infections.

Terrance Allen Davis Jr. of Caldwell, Idaho, was in good spirits and good condition at Texas Children's Hospital after the 2 1/2-hour-long procedure which doctor's called the child's only real chance to live.

TJ, as he is called, suffers from Severe Combined Immune Deficiency, a congenital condition in which he has no defense against infections.

Dr. William Shearer, professor of pediatrics at Baylor College of Medicine, said SCID exists at birth and is inherited in the chromosomes. Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome — commonly called AIDS — harms the body in a similar fashion.

TJ's father, Terrance Davis, 22, said the condition was diagnosed in his son in January. A hospital in California refused to admit the baby because Davis carried no insurance, but a research center at Texas Children's funded by the National Institutes of Health is paying for TJ's operation.

Shearer said TJ has a "far advanced infection" in his cheek and nasal passages which doctors said could spread to his eye and brain. That infection, he said, made the bone marrow transplant mandatory.

"TJ has a small but very real chance," Shearer said. Bone marrow taken from the father was treated for 16 hours to remove all harmful bacteria and infused into the child. The baby immediately developed a high fever and had trouble breathing, but Shearer said both symptoms returned to normal within an hour.

Davis, an unemployed maintenance worker, and his wife, Linda, 19, have been living there until their son recovers. Shearer estimated it could take up to six months before results are evident.

"We are sticking together and keeping a positive attitude," Mrs. Davis said.

The procedure, which Shearer described as "highly experimental," has been performed similarly only once. A 12-year-old Houston boy, known only as David, underwent a similar transplant in October. The marrow transplanted into both David and TJ's bodies came from their relatives and was not perfectly matched.

Shearer said two other cases involving identical matched marrow have been successful.

To fight the infection, TJ, doctors have been treating him with large doses of antibiotics.

Steel mill fate decided by Cleveland election

United Press International CLEVELAND — Voters reelected a heated dispute Tuesday on the city's plan to create 400 jobs over union objections it was a back-door approach to hiring non-union labor and using foreign steel in a local mill.

Election officials expected about 35 percent of the city's registered voters — about 110,000 people — to cast ballots in the special referendum to provide a low-interest government loan for the steel mill.

But voter turnout was extremely light Tuesday morning, with only about 10 percent of registered Cleveland voters going to the polls, officials said. They attributed the low turnout to an early morning snowfall that dropped an inch of snow on the city, but the snow had ended by noon.

Polls were to close at 7:30 p.m. City officials said the mill would create 389 jobs vital to the recovery of economically depressed Cleveland, where unemployment stands at 15 percent.

Union leaders, however, claimed the loan was an attempt to subsidize a firm that will use foreign steel and hire non-union labor at low wages.

City Council approved the $7.5 million loan last November for Bar Mill Group Development Inc., Muskogee, Okla., which said it cannot build the mill without the 8 percent loan.

Steelworkers, with the support of other unions, forced a public vote on the loan through a successful referendum petition drive, marking the first time union officials have tried the ballot box to stop what they consider foreign competition.

Mayor George V. Voinovich argued for approval of the loan, saying, "In addition to the 389 jobs ... there is something for the future. The failure would cast a shadow over the Greater

Cleveland area and that would prevent the light of future investment to penetrate

Frank Valenta, director of District 28 of the United Steelworkers union, led the fight against the loan and termed election a referendum on foreign imports.

"They (the voters) are up with the competition in Japanese steel and foreign ports and are tired of watching Americans out of work," said Valenta.

Valenta said he has charges of foreign steel non-union labor on the Oklahoma operation of Japanese steel is used and workers are not unionized.

However, the mill's operators have said they will do every effort to use domestic steel, and workers at the mill will have the right to organize.

Court examines oil company merger

United Press International DENVER — A federal appeals court Tuesday studied the latest attempt by Pennzoil to halt the $10.1 billion merger of Texaco and Getty Oil Co., though Texaco continued with its plan to complete the merger.

Pennzoil on Monday asked the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to temporarily halt the merger, and requested an early hearing to make the order permanent. The judges took the request under advisement.

Texaco, meanwhile, extended its tender offer until 7 p.m. Tuesday to purchase up to 28 million shares of Getty common stock for $128 per share. Texaco said it has under tender or contract more than 95 percent of Getty Oil's 79.1 million outstanding common shares — some 75.5 million shares.

The merger plan needs the approval of the Federal Trade Commission.

Pennzoil was turned down by a judge in Tulsa, Okla., last weekend in its efforts to get a preliminary injunction to stop the merger. Pennzoil argued the deal would violate antitrust laws.

The Oklahoma judge ruled Pennzoil had standing to sue, despite Texaco's contract with Pennzoil, but said Pennzoil had not proven it would be damaged.

Jay Greenfield, Pennzoil attorney, filed a motion in the 10th Circuit Court Monday asking the court to issue a preliminary injunction to block the merger pending an emergency hearing on the suit.

"We are asking that the deal be heard this week and that Texaco be enjoined from proceeding with the merger until appeal is heard," Greenfield said.

"We claim that the deal is in violation of the law because that we had not shown to the jury and we pointed out to the judge had expressly said he was not ruling there had been violation of antitrust laws."

The Pennzoil motion for a preliminary injunction is pending in the U.S. District Court in Tulsa, Okla., under provisions of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act, which calls for a 30-day waiting period in such cases.
