Conservation cuts aquifer's losses

United Press International
LUBBOCK — Water conservation practices have helped cut the Ogallala Aquifer's rate of decline in a 15-county area, officials reported Wednesday.

The High Plains Underground Water Conservation District issued a report on water level statistics gathered from 948 wells covering the 5.2 million acres of the world's largest aquifer.

District Manager Wayne Wyatt said that from 1974 to 1984, the average annual change in water levels was 1.40 feet per well. The annual drop was 1.90 feet during the first five years, he said, and 0.88 feet in the last five years.

"This indicates a 54 percent reduction in the rate of depletion," Wyatt said. According to the report, the average decline in water levels throughout the service area was 0.56 feet, or 40 percent.

The southern portion of the water district had the smallest rate of decline. This area, which includes Bailey, Lamb, Hale, Floyd, Crosby, Cochran, Hockley, Lubbock and Lynn counties, showed an annual average drop of 0.45 feet since 1979.

The water table actually rose slightly in Cochran, Hockley, Lubbock and Lynn counties during the last five years, Wyatt said.

An annual decline of 1.69 feet was reported during the last five years in the district's northern counties of Potter, Randall, Armstrong, Deaf Smith, Parmer and Castro.

Panhandle Underground Water Conservation District Manager Richard Bowers said his district also had recorded a slowing rate of decline, but it was not as much as in the Rock area.

Bowers estimated the decline for his district slowed 10 percent from 1984 when compared to previous 10 years. The decline includes parts of Gray, Garza and Armstrong counties.

Bowers blamed water users in the city of Amarillo and the nuclear weapons plant for a decline in the aquifer level in son County.

Former sheriff sentenced to jail for civil rights beating violation

United Press International
DALLAS — A judge Wednesday ordered former Rockwall County sheriff John Marshall Vance to report to federal marshals March 14 to begin serving one year in prison for violating the civil rights of a 15-year-old boy who was beaten in custody.

In addition to assessing the maximum jail sentence for the conviction, U.S. District Judge A. Joe Fish fined Vance $1,000. Fish said he wanted to make an example of Vance for other public officials in giving him the year's sentence.

Rockwall Deputy Roy Bradford Woodriddle, who had pleaded guilty to the same charge, was fined $500.

Vance, 52, and Woodriddle, 36, admitted last month that they both beat a 15-year-old boy suspected of stealing cars last summer.

Vance at first denied to a Rockwall County grand jury that he beat Richard V. Williams, but the boy's guardian, Martha Glenn of Rowlett, took up the matter with the FBI and the Justice Department, which conducted a six-month investigation into her complaint.

In an agreement worked out with Rockwall District Attorney Nick Woodall, Vance agreed to plead guilty to federal misdemeanor charges of civil rights violations rather than face charges that he lied to the county grand jury.

Vance also agreed to resign as sheriff and not run for a second term, even though he had just filed for re-election.

Vance was one month into the third year of his first term as sheriff in Dallas County.

In this case, Vance was a flagrant anti-imposition of his own will on the citizens of Dallas County, said the secretary of the Texas Department of Public Safety, Bill Clements.
