

Police chasing 2 convicts

United Press International
KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Two escaped convicts who vowed not to be captured alive killed a Sunday school teacher grilling steaks in his back yard and abducted his wife, breaking through a police dragnet before freeing the woman unharmed 400 miles away.

A nationwide alert was issued for Ronald Freeman, 41, and James Clegg, 30, who were armed with a shotgun and at least four pistols. The two were among five convicts who escaped from the Fort Pillow Prison Farm in west Tennessee Saturday.

"I hope we get them before somebody else gets killed," said Sullivan County Chief Deputy Keith Westmoreland in Bristol. Elizabeth "Bo" Windrow, 57, told Knoxville police the fugitives left her lying on the floor board of her car at a rest stop east of Knoxville about 6 a.m. with orders to count to 500 before leaving.

The fugitives fled in a waiting car, she said, but she was too frightened to look. Officials said they believed a woman was driving the car in which the pair fled.

Windrow's husband, retired businessman Paul Windrow, was killed by the convicts Tuesday night.

Windrow, 59, a Sunday school teacher, put a .45 caliber pistol in his belt Tuesday night before he went out to grill steaks at his home near the prison in Brownsville.

Freeman and Clegg, each armed with a pistol, emerged from a hole they had dug and shot Windrow when he pulled the gun, authorities said. They took a shotgun and two pistols from the home.

Law officer David Davenport said the convicts told Windrow "they will not be taken alive."

Hundreds of law enforcement agents searched the mountains of five east Tennessee counties Wednesday, setting up roadblocks. Freeman was serving 198 years for the 1970 murders of his wife and 10-year-old stepdaughter and Clegg was serving life as a habitual criminal.

A used car dealer in Newport, Tenn., 30 miles east of Knoxville, reported two men fitting their description visited his lot about 10 a.m. Late Wednesday authorities said they believed the men had fled the state.

"A nationwide alert has gone out. They obviously would be trying to put as much distance between themselves and this state as possible," Tennessee Bureau of Investigation Director Arzo Carson said.

Windrow said the convicts bragged they hid in a hole on her farm for two days despite a massive search with helicopters and bloodhounds in the woods near the home.

After the convicts released Windrow, she drove to a gasoline station about 10 miles away and telephoned police.

"She was crying and she was a nervous wreck," said Lester Province, an attendant at the station.

Province said Windrow told him she was inside her house when "she heard one of the convicts say, 'Don't do that,' and then she heard gunfire."

Knoxville Police Chief Robert Marshall said the woman was "trying to help us, but bless her heart, she just doesn't know anything."
