

Entrants to crawl from keg to keg

Business frat sponsors a 'bar crawl'

By CASEY RAMSEY

College students have been known to do some pretty strange things, some of them easier than others. Almost anyone can streak; in fact, it's probably fun. But on the other hand, stuffing yourself into a phone booth or eating a gold fish is definitely for the more serious pranksters.

Now Pi Sigma Epsilon, Texas A&M marketing fraternity, wants to add something new to the list. A bar crawl.

Several Northgate merchants have donated kegs of beer to Pi Sigma Epsilon for the event.

The idea is to "crawl" from one keg to the next. The bar crawl, to be held March 22, has a $10 entry fee.

The fraternity plans to divide profits from the bar crawl in three ways. About a fourth will go to refund the initiation fees of new members, a fourth to help pay expenses of delegates to the organization's national convention in Fort Worth and half to Bryan-College Station charities.

Russell Hassler, president of Pi Sigma Epsilon, said the fraternity is open to any student interested in sales or marketing research.

"We are more than just a social fraternity," Hassler said. "We are a national professional business fraternity in marketing, sales management and salesmanship."

Hassler said Pi Sigma Epsilon uses marketing research projects to learn about marketing techniques first hand.

"We hold seminars and bring speakers to discuss different aspects of the marketing field," Hassler said. "Then we go out and apply that knowledge in extensive research projects."

Pi Sigma Epsilon has 28 members but 23 new members will be sworn in after they have completed their initiation projects.

The new members are divided into three groups, each with a fund-raising activity. One group has the Bar Crawl. Another group sponsored a button-down shirt night at Scandals last Thursday. Any male who wore a button-down to Scandals drank free until closing. The last group will sell items related to spring break, such as beach towels, visors and ice chests later in the semester.

Marla Steely, vice president of personnel, said the main goal for Pi Sigma Epsilon this semester is recognition.

"We want students to recognize our name, what we do and what we have to offer," she said.
