Legal school may close because funds lacking

United Press International HOUSTON — The National College of Criminal Defense Lawyers, located on the campus of the University of Houston, may go out of business by the end of the week because it has run out of funds, officials said Wednesday.

Emmitt Colvin, the college president, said the school may have to shut its doors because it lost grants from two of three major donors, including the American Bar Association and the National Defenders Association.

In the past the college received $15,000 to $20,000 from each of the three groups. The college's annual budget is $300,000.

The bulk of the budget comes from fees charged to attorneys who want to attend courses or buy educational materials, Colvin said.

The college has been struggling financially since 1981, when the federal government cut off funding.

"The difficulty is that criminal defense attorneys are unsaleable products," Colvin said, referring to attorneys who represent infamous suspects. "We're not very popular. If we ever become popular, we won't be doing our jobs."

Richard Collins, spokesman for the American Bar Association, said his group stopped future grants to the college because the college had no long-term plan to raise money.

Bentsen asking aid for U.S.-Mex border

WASHINGTON — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said Wednesday he plans a seven-pronged legislative attack on problems facing the financially beleaguered U.S.-Mexico border.

Bentsen said his staff is drafting bills as part of a border aid initiative. It will work with other members of the Texas delegation to pass legislation helping the border, which is suffering an "incredible impact by currency devaluations."

"I think the administration has made a serious mistake by not aggressively meeting the concerns of this area in this kind of emergency situation regardless of the politics of it," he said. Bentsen's package would funnel more aid to the 2,900-mile-long border and make it easier to develop new businesses in the area that is home to 8 million people.

The Mexican peso lost 500 percent of its value during three devaluations. The latest available figures showed Mexican nationals dramatically reduced the amount of their purchases on the American side of the border from $4.6 billion to about $450 million in just a year.

Bentsen told Texas reporters he is hopeful some portions of his initiative can be passed by Congress this year and others will receive approval next year. "Do I think this will truly resolve the problem?" he said. "No. I don't think so. I think it's a major assist. We have quite a hill to climb. What we're facing with Mexico is at least another two years of that."

He acknowledged it might be difficult to garner support from other areas suffering from difficulties. However, he believes they will react to the border's dramatically high employment and poverty with compassion and concern.

Bentsen said his proposal would:

- Reauthorize the Economic Development Administration and add provisions to the border economy;
- Amend the Trade Act of 1974 to direct the secretary of commerce to make technical assistance available to citizens near the border in order to help increase foreign trade capacity;
- Amend the Customs Modernization Act of 1983 to allow the Customs Services to hire personnel in the next year, including the proposed production of 954 positions.

— Require that any enacted to designate emergency zones also include counties suffering from foreign currency devaluations, an unemployment rate 1.5 times the national average, and a poverty rate 20 percent above the U.S. average.

— Amend the Veterans Assistance Act to require a determination of the need to the Veterans Administration hospital for the estimated 70,000 veterans in the 14 southernmost counties of Texas.

— Amend the Small Business Act to authorize loans to a business in an area suffering from economic hardships resulting from extraordinary events and temporal natural conditions, and foreign currency devaluations; and — Reauthorize the Farm Home Administration community loan programs for assistance for water and sewer community facilities and industry development.
