Ag happy to be Miss Rodeo Texas

By KARI FLUEGEL
Battalion Reporter

Lashawn Wardlaw claimed another first for Texas A&M when she became the first Aggie to win the Miss Rodeo Texas title.

Wardlaw, a freshman journalism major from Bracketville, competed with 18 other contestants in appearance, personality and horsemanship to claim the title during the March 7-10 pageant in San Antonio. In addition to winning the overall contest, she also won the personality and horsemanship competitions.

Representing Texas, Wardlaw next will compete in the Miss Rodeo America pageant in Oklahoma City in December.

During her year-long reign as Miss Rodeo Texas, Wardlaw will appear at more than 80 rodeos around the state. Because of this heavy schedule, Wardlaw will have to leave the University for a year.

"I have no regrets about it at all," she said. "You get an education from the people you meet."

Wardlaw's duties will include radio and television appearances as well as various duties at the rodeos.

"My job is to promote rodeo and the state of Texas the best way possible," she said.

For winning the title, Wardlaw received a $1,000 scholarship, a $1,000 modeling session, a hand-tooled saddle, an engraved belt buckle, a western wardrobe and the use of a truck and trailer for a year.

Miss Rodeo Texas is not her first pageant. Before entering the Miss Rodeo Texas competition, each participant had to win a preliminary contest. Wardlaw entered the pageant as Miss Super Bull, a title she won in Del Rio.

Other titles she has claimed are Miss Kinney County, a runner-up to Miss South Longhorn and Miss West for the San Antonio Show.

About 50 people from etville were in San Antonio, supporting her during the Rodeo Texas pageant. Wardlaw made winning all the more difficult, she said.

"When you see your dad's eyes, you know you've won."

Officers present opposing views

Air Force gets dramatic for Aggie

By MELINDA HANSEN
Battalion Reporter

What looked like the beginning of a small-scale war between an American and a Russian on the Soviet Union's technological progress, turned out to be an act for the audience to enjoy Wednesday morning in Rudder Theater.

Two officers from Wright-Patterson Air Force Base near Dayton, Ohio, presented the American and Soviet viewpoints on which country is ahead in military potential and technological enterprise.

From the base's Foreign Technological Division, Lt. Keith Bubb and 2nd Lt. Chris Mathews, who played the part of comrade Capt. V.I. Tokarev of the Soviet Air Guards during the presentation, gave opposing views on the Soviets' technology as a challenge to the United States.

Bubb said the Soviets are spending more on the military, since it's their top priority. For example, predictions are that in 1985, the Soviet Union will spend $230 billion compared to the United States' $160 billion for research.

Bubb then said the Soviets get their aero propulsion, communication, composites, computer technology, integrated circuits, manufacturing technology, and semiconductors from the Western states. He also said Russia is starting to pass the United States in all areas of scientific technology.

"Russia will do what only is necessary for protection," Mathews (Tokarev) said.

However, Bubb said the Russians are working toward dominance in outer space. "Tokarev" said just the opposite, and the audience snickered at the statement.

"Tokarev" also said the Soviet Union seeks peace and security. "We want to be always prepared to protect ourselves," he said. "We do not wish war, but to deal from a position of strength." For the Russians, communism will not be secure until all other forms of government are abolished.

When Bubb explained his "comrade" was actually an American second lieutenant, the audience was shocked. Bubb had taken Russian on the school, but to the audience sounded convincing. He couple of lines in Russian and then had a strong throughout the program top it off, he wore the military uniform.

Bubb said it would be hard to get a Russian to this country to discuss technology. When the States learns of Russian technological advances from the Three Mile Island and Chernobyl call for a think in terms of the when giving a presentation

Central America envoys sent on first mission

United Press International
WASHINGTON — President Reagan, his request for emergency aid to El Salvador bogged down in Congress, sent a new envoy to Central America off on his first mission Wednesday with little hope for a quick breakthrough.

Harry Shlaudeman, whose appointment as peace envoy to Central America was confirmed by the Senate Tuesday, met with Reagan at the White House on the eve of his departure for Honduras, El Salvador, Guatemala, Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

A senior administration official said Shlaudeman will depart on the trip Thursday and try "to get the momentum going" and reinvigorate diplomatic efforts that have lagged since his predecessor, Richard Stone, resigned.

"It's a slow process," the official said. "I don't think anybody expects him to work miracles."

Shlaudeman gave no hint of new approaches to the turmoil in Central America.

Asked what Reagan told him, the diplomat replied, "He wished me luck."

He told reporters Reagan reiterated "that there must be a political solution in Central America."

"The administration's policy is directed to that — bringing together all of these various strands," he said.

At the same time, Shlaudeman stressed the need for strong U.S. involvement in the area and said the United States has made "considerable progress" in preventing a communist takeover of El Salvador.

On Capitol Hill, Senate publican leaders expressed hope that Reagan's emergency aid request for El Salvador be brought to a vote Tuesday. But House Speaker O'Neill said he does not expect a House vote on aid to El Salvador before the next month's recess.

The Democratic Policy Committee's Central America Group, headed by Sen. Inouye of Hawaii, met for an hour Wednesday.

Afterward, Inouye reported he is "certain" he will approve $61.7 million supplemental military aid to El Salvador, despite moves by Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts to reduce the amount.

Murderer now serving life gets additional 99 years

United Press International
CORSIKANA — A man serving a life sentence in Tennessee was sentenced Wednesday to a 99-year prison term for the 1981 murder of a 21-year-old woman who was stabbed 48 times.

Randolph Eugene Arledge, 29, who has a 12-year record of felony convictions, was convicted Tuesday of killing Carol Eugene Armstrong.

Prosecutors said Arledge, driving a decommissioned sheriff's car, tricked Armstrong into stopping on the night of Aug. 30, 1981. He then forced her into his car, took her to a remote county road and killed her. Prosecutor Jennifer Judin said Arledge was seen at the home of his sister with blood on his shirt, a bloody knife in his pocket and a human bite mark on his forehead.

His sister, Cathy Williams, testified for the defense Arledge had been in a fight with his brother-in-law earlier in the evening, which they said explained the blood and bite mark.

Williams at the time was sharing a house with Vicki Jernigan, ex-wife of Joseph Paul Jernigan, 30, who is under death sentence for the murder of an elderly man less than two months before the Armstrong killing.

Armstrong's body was found on a dirt road six miles west of Corsicana. Though her jeans were found about 60 feet away, Judin said the state could not make a case for capital murder based on homicide in connection with rape.

Judin said Arledge would not serve time for murder, since his Tennessee would run concurrent with the Tennessee term.

"In Tennessee, he was eligible for parole until 1985, Texas, he would be eligible for years."

Arledge was indicted by fellow inmates told Arledge had told them about slaying.

Benny Lamas, who is serving three life sentences in a Tennessee state prison, said Tuesday that Arledge had admitted to the killing of a woman.
