Marvin Gaye believed to have shared 'bad blood' with father

United Press International
LOS ANGELES — Marvin Gaye had clashed in the past with his father, a retired preacher accused of gunning the soul singer down in a family feud, but the squabbles had never been violent, police said Monday.

Gaye, who would have turned 45 on Monday, was shot Sunday during a fight with Marvin Gaye Sr. over an insurance matter. The elder Gaye, 70, was booked for murder and held without bail pending arraignment Wednesday.

"There was some bad blood," Lt. Bob Martin said. "But there were no indications of physical altercations in the past. It was nothing more than what you would expect a father and son to disagree about."

He talked at length with detectives and Martin said charges would be filed based on his statements and interviews with the suspect's wife, Alberta, 71, the only witnesses to the slaying. He declined to say what the couple told police.

The squabble between father and son, which began Saturday night and resumed Sunday, involved the mailing of an insurance letter, Martin said.

"It's the kind of an argument 3-year-olds would have," he added.

Gaye, who lived with his parents in their Wilshire area home, called his father to his room to discuss the matter, then ordered him to leave, Martin said. The elder Gaye allegedly returned with a gun and shot his son twice in the upper torso.
