Death row inmate asks for new trial

United Press International
HOUSTON — A Vermont man sentenced to death for the 1983 stabbing death of an Alabama teen-age runaway has asked for a new trial because a co-defendant has confessed to the killing, lawyers said Tuesday.

A prosecutor said he would oppose the motion for a new trial for Robert Nelson Drew because the co-defendant's confession contradicts previous statements.

A jury in Houston convicted Drew, 24, of capital murder in the Feb. 21, 1983, stabbing death of Jeffrey Leon Mays, 17, of Birmingham, Ala.

Drew was sentenced to death by injection.

A hearing on the motion for a new trial for Drew was scheduled for April 13.

Drew, meanwhile, remains on Texas death row near Huntsville.

A co-defendant in the case,

Ernest Purleaswski, 33, of Chicago, originally was charged with capital murder but pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of murder after Drew was convicted. He received a 66-year sentence.

Ronald Kube, an associate of New York civil rights lawyer William Kunstler, who represents Drew, said Purleaswski signed an affidavit March 28 in which he admitting killing Mays and exonerated Drew of any wrongdoing.

"I alone committed the murder of Jeffrey Mays," the affidavit said. "Robert Drew did not assist me in any way. I will testify that I alone committed the murder of Jeffrey Mays... Robert Drew is innocent."

"What's incredible is that Drew was sentenced to death, which could have been carried out," Kube said. "It's lucky that we got this four months after his trial rather than four years."

Assistant District Attorney Eric Hagstette said the state would oppose a new trial for Drew because Purleaswski has changed his story.

"This is different from what he's said in the past and he's given us two statements in the past," Hagstette said.

Hagstette said the state could not prosecute Purleaswski for Mays' death because he has already pleaded guilty to a reduced charge in the same case. The law prohibits a person from being tried twice for the same crime.

"We cannot touch him. He has nothing to lose ... he might help Drew, but it just rings false to us," Hagstette said.

Prosecutors claimed Mays, who was traveling to Houston in search of work, was killed after he gave Drew and Purleaswski a ride along Interstate 10. Drew was picked up in Lafayette, La. Purleaswski was picked up in Beaumont.
