Chemistry students win awards

Three Texas A&M students received $50 cash awards for their papers presented at the Third Annual Texas A&M Undergraduate Chemical Research Conference and High School Conference of Chemistry March 30. Senior undergraduate chemistry majors Michael T. Blanda, Dana L. Williamson and Frank McDonald were presented their awards at the awards ceremony following the conference.

Paper named best in country

A paper, titled "Determination of Cloud Heights Using Landsat Imagery," written by Barry P. Hill, a range science major at Texas A&M, was selected by the awards committee of the American Society of Photogrammetry as the best student paper submitted in 1983. This is the fourth year in a row that Texas A&M has had a student win first place for the undergraduate student paper award on photogrammetry.

Student-by-mail named National Merit Scholar

LINCOLN, Neb. — Reuben Worley, who has spent only one year in a conventional classroom since he entered high school in 1979, has been named a National Merit Scholar.

Worley does his lessons by mail from Spain, where he has lived most of his life with his Southern Baptist missionary parents.

He is a student with the University of Nebraska-Lincoln's Independent Study High School, the largest of its type in the world.

Principal Robert W. Abel said Worley is the school's only student in recent years to have been chosen a National Merit Scholar.

Worley's older brother Robert is a graduate of the school, and his younger brother Randy enrolled last fall as a freshman.

Worley spent the 1982-83 school year as a junior at Jefferson Moore High School in Waco, then re-entered the UNL program when he returned to Spain last year.

His independent study schedule includes a computer basics course, English, a combined analytical geometry-calculus course, American government and Spanish.

Witnesses of the Resurrection

(fourth in a series of paid advertisements by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saint Student Association.)

As Easter approaches this year many of us will reflect on the perfect example of the Savior Jesus Christ. We reread with awe and wonder the New Testament accounts of the closing events which led to our Easter celebration of today. Yet for others, the course of time and distance since then may seem to have altered the significance and timelessness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

In the 13th chapter of 2nd Corinthians the Apostle Paul reminds those that in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established. In light of this scripture, we rejoice in the remarkable discovery and translation, by the gift and power of God, of a second witness testifying of the mission of Christ. This other Scripture, known to members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints as the Book of Mormon describes the religious history of Holy Land inhabitants who migrated to the Americas centuries ago. Of most significance in this record is the description of the visitation of Jesus Christ to these people shortly after His Resurrection where He revealed to them the Gospel He had taught in the Old World.

These two marvelous Scriptures serve as dual witnesses that Christ indeed broke the bonds of death and resurrected and testify of the universal love and concern of God for all mankind.

White's aide named state head for Fritz

United Press International

AUSTIN — Dwayne Holman, an expert on caucus politics and the engineer behind Gov. Mark White's 1982 election, was named director of Walter Mondale's presidential campaign in Texas Wednesday.

Holman, who took an immediate unpaid leave of absence from White's staff, said Mondale's Texas campaign will center on courting those Democrats most likely to participate in Texas' confusing delegate selection process.

Holman said Mondale's Texas campaign will feature a minimum of television advertising, bumper stickers and other paraphernalia normally associated with political campaigns.

"You concentrate on working the folks who take part in party functions — that attend party caucuses," Holman said.

Under Texas Democratic

Party rules, precinct conventions — the first of three steps in selecting delegates to the national convention — begin 15 minutes after the polls close on May 5.

Democratic candidates for president are not listed on the primary ballot in Texas.

Holman said Texas' caucus system, which has come under fire recently by those who feel it discourages participation, will work to Mondale's benefit because much of the state party organization already supported the former vice president.

Holman's appointment was announced by Jim Quackenbush, Mondale's deputy campaign director for southern states. Quackenbush said he expects Gary Hart to spend two or three times as much money in Texas as Mondale.

Much of the funds spent by both candidates, he said, will go for telephone banks used to contact active Democrats.

Holman, who also directed White's election as attorney general in 1978, said his participation in Mondale's campaign should not be construed as an endorsement by White, who has yet to state any preference among the three leading contenders.

"Basically, the governor is going to have to decide that," Holman said. "You'll have to ask him."
