Students enjoy spring's arrival

By SALLY SCHWIERZKE
Reporter

A single flowering bluebonnet attracts a hovering bee, water spiders skim the still chilly water, and a slick lizard suns himself on the warm cement. Spring has arrived, and hopefully, is here to stay.

No one is able to suppress that certain feeling when the first day of spring sunshine raises the mercury above 70 degrees. No one even tries. If you didn't know better, it would seem that spring fever really is a fever. It certainly makes people do strange things.

The student population may have doubled since the sun came out, if all the students sunning themselves on the benches, grass and any other sunlit patch is any indication. It makes the casual campus cruiser wonder just how many of those sun worshippers are skipping class.

It becomes evident that spring fever is a fever when half the class is missing, and the professor spends ten minutes lecturing on how he expects students to have a little more regard for higher education, then he lets the class out 30 minutes early because "it is such a fine day."

If you happen to pass the creamery, you will notice their increase in business. People are spilling out the door as they wait in line. They don't seem to mind though, they know it is worth the wait.

Those who already are enjoying their afternoon ice cream break don't miss a lick. The warm weather won't allow it.

The aerobics track is crowded with enthusiastic joggers. Not only the die-hard joggers, but even those who just couldn't sit at home when the weather is so beautiful. Even the professors take advantage of the spring weather, and spend their lunch time enjoying the warm, fresh air rather than sitting in their stuffy offices.

The Texas A&M baseball team draws more than their average number of fans during the nice weather. Everyone wants as little of the action, even if it does only involve sitting in the stands bronzing their bodies.

The smell of fresh cut grass, suntan oil and blooming honeysuckle are evidence that spring has again, and at last, arrived.

Strait

and pushed me. It's been great."

Strait has written only one song that he has recorded. It is "I Can't See Texas From Here."

He followed his hit single "Unwound" and the LP "Strait Country" with "Fool Hearted Memory," "If You're Thinking You Want a Stranger" (his first number one single) and "Amarillo By Morning."

"I go to Nashville every once in a while to record or if I need to take care of some business," he said. "I don't spend a whole lot of time there."

He and his six-member band played about 200 dates in 1983. He said he plans to slow down a bit in 1984.
