LBJ papers not open to public

United Press International

AUSTIN — Only about 40 percent of the 31 million pieces paper stored in the Lyndon B. Johnson Presidential Library are open to the public, officials

Tina Lawson, supervisory archivist at the library, said the remaining papers are still awaiting review before being opened to the public.

"When the library first opened, (Johnson) wanted things opened by subject," she said. "After he died, what we concentrated on were the presidential years. A lot of those are

When Johnson turned over his papers, he stipulated that defense classified documents, papers relating to his family or personal life and "materials containing statements which may in any manner be used to injure, embarrass, or harass any person" remain restricted.
