Museums

than 100 mustangs, and was delayed by World War II before finishing the sculpture.

Of course, a visit to Austin also would mean a trip to the State Capitol Building. When the legislature isn't in session, both the House and Senate chambers are open for a free tour.

Moving east, we come to Houston. NASA alone would keep you occupied for a while. It's a free exposure to some of the best of modern technology.

The Lyndon Baines Johnson Space Center is my favorite museum in Texas. It's got giant rockets, a lunar rover and Skylab trainers, and you get to put on space helmets for your own imaginary space trip.

Another neat place to take a trip is the San Jacinto Museum of History. For $1.50 you can ride the elevator up the 570-foot monument. You get a great view the Battleship Texas. The ship also houses a museum.

las-Fort Worth area, you'll find several museums worth seeing. The Science Place, which is a museum and learning center dealing with science and technology.

They have a new "hands-on" exhibit on topics like energy, computers, health and anatomy, communications and engineering. The museum also features the first solar-powered airplane. It costs $1.00 for adults.

Another interesting place in Dallas is the Old City Park. The view of a dog-trot house with the Dallas skyline in the background is worth the trip.

The Fort Worth Museum of Science and History offers the Noble Planetarium's light and sound show called Laser Magic. And the Omni Theater features an 80 foot tilted dome that creates 180-degree images. It's free.

Other unusual Texas museums include Jefferson, which has the Jay Gould Railroad Car, a museum that doubles as an interesting hotel; Kilgore has the East Texas Oil Museum, complete with an oil well; and Nederland has the Dutch Windmill Museum, housed in an exact replica of a Dutch Windmill.

Since Texas has more than 500 museums, they can't all be included, but they should be easy for you to find. Most are free; none cost more than $3.00, and all of them offer a change of summer pace.
