Kuwait denied Stingers

United Press International
WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has told the government of Kuwait that its request for Stinger anti-aircraft missiles will not be granted under present circumstances, administration and congressional sources said Monday.

A State Department official said, "No decision has been made" on the Kuwaiti request for missiles to protect its shipping from Iranian air attack in the Persian Gulf. But the sources said the Kuwaitis have been told the administration does not now have any intention of selling the Stinger missiles to any other countries in the Persian Gulf area.

Pentagon spokesman Michael Burch, when asked about the sale last week, suggested that Kuwait could turn to British or French suppliers, indicating the United States would rather not sell the missiles to Kuwait.

According to the sources, the administration decision was the result of a series of factors:

—A belief that the Saudi Arabian patrol boats, armed with Stingers and F-15s and guided by AWACs command-and-control planes, will be sufficient to protect Kuwaiti shipping. The Saudis were sold 400 Stingers and 200 launchers last week under the president's emergency powers, without the need to go through Congress.

In addition, the Kuwaitis have a competent air force, including Mirages and U.S.-made Skyhawks, which should be able to protect its shipping.

—The procedure in the Saudi sale, which evaded the congressional powers, provoked some resentment on Capitol Hill and that backlash would probably focus on the Kuwaiti sale, creating a bruising fight that the administration does not want to take on in an election year.

—There are fears that Kuwait, with a large Shiite Moslem population and a large number of Palestinian workers, would not be a secure environment for the missiles, which would be deadly in the hands of a terrorist.

—A current shortage of the missiles in the U.S. armed forces inventory exists because of the Saudi sale and other factors. The Kuwaitis were told that if they want to go to the end of the line of other Stinger recipients, including the U.S. armed forces, there could be more than a two-year wait.

—There is resentment on the part of the State Department and other U.S. government officials that recent Kuwaiti actions show the Kuwaitis "want to have things both ways," in the words of one congressional source.

The Kuwaiti government rejected Brandon Grove, a highly regarded U.S. career diplomat as ambassador to Kuwait, because he had served as U.S. consul in Jerusalem, a decision that State Department officials criticized as "stupid and insensitive."

"Yet," said the source, "when they need help, they come to us, privately."

One recent report from Kuwait said there was rejoicing in Kuwait after the U.S. embassy there was blown up in December by a terrorist and the elation was only stilled when the Kuwaitis discovered the terrorists had also tried to blow up some Kuwaiti targets, including the country's water supply.

The State Department confirmed last week that the United States and Kuwait were discussing a request from the Kuwaitis for Stingers, which are a shoulder-fired missile with the ability to hit an incoming attacking plane.

Soviets: Dissident lives

United Press International
MOSCOW — The Soviet Union insisted Monday that dissident Andrei Sakharov is in good health and charged that anyone who said otherwise was "burying him alive" and trying to smear the Kremlin.

Tass scoffed at reports in London and Rome during the weekend that Sakharov had died following a hunger strike he began May 2 to pressure authorities to allow his wife, Yelena Bonner, to travel to the West for medical treatment.

"They (Sakharov and Mrs. Bonner) are in good health and not starving," the official news agency Tass said in the first official word on the Nobel Prize winner.

"Perhaps they in the Western centers of psychological warfare would like to hear different news, but cannot tell them anything different. Those who repeat rumors of Sakharov's death, Tass said, "are merely burying him alive."

"We are not going to take any protection Sakharov and Bonner, neither can we allow all this to be used for libelous anti-Soviet propaganda," it said.
The report charged that there is a Western plan to engineer Sakharov "hunger strike" and help Mrs. Bonner to seek asylum in the U.S. Embassy, calling the scheme "a flop."
Vladimir Karpov, the President of the Soviet Writers' Union who has high-ranking contacts in the Kremlin, told Western journalists by telephone that "my comrades told me that Sakharov was alive on Sunday
