Glashow to continue affiliation with A&M

Dr. Sheldon Glashow, who shared the Nobel Prize in Physics for his work on the fundamental forces of nature, has agreed to continue his "University Scholar" affiliation with Texas A&M University and will visit the campus at least three times during the coming academic year.

Glashow, who is Higgins Professor of Physics at Harvard University, said the first visit is scheduled for Sept. 10, with other visits in October and sometime in the spring.

He will also continue his work with the four-university consortium proposing Texas as the site of a $2 billion-plus superconducting super-collider, an unprecedented scientific device for exploring nature's smallest particles. Rice University, the University of Houston, the University of Texas and Texas A&M are cooperating with the state's leadership to convince the federal government the project should be located nearby.

Savings and loan collapse probed

United Press International

WASHINGTON — Empire Savings and Loan Association was on "shaky ground" several years before its March collapse and a federal agency should have moved to stabilize it, a House oversight panel chairman said Thursday.

"There was something lacking," said Rep. Doug Barnard, D-Ga., whose Government Operations subcommittee investigated the bank's failure. "Empire was on very shaky ground for two or three years before it finally closed."

"Had close attention been given to the S&L by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board — I don't know whether it would have saved it, but it would have minimized the damage."

The Mesquite S&L had $308.9 million in deposits when it was closed March 14. The payout on insured deposits will be the largest direct payoff in the 50-year history of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.

Almost all of Empire's assets were loans on condominiums under construction outside Dallas. The bank's chairman, Spencer Blain Jr., has denied allegations he personally profited from proceeds on Empire's loans, procured fraudulent appraisals of real estate projects or was involved in quick, successive sales of property designed to boost its value on paper.

Barnard told reporters there were "many reasons" for Empire's problems — such as an overconcentration of loans in one area — but "it failed because of overall mismanagement dating back many years."

Barnard's panel held hearings earlier this year on the Empire collapse, and also examined the 1988 failure of Penn Square of Oklahoma City and last year's failure of United American Bank in Knoxville, Tenn.

"This really completes the cycle on failed institutions," Barnard said. "The regulatory agencies did not move fast enough when alerted. There's got to be better management on the part of the agencies."

Barnard's Commerce, Consumer and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee Thursday unanimously approved a 94-page draft report detailing the S&L's failure and sent it to the committee for consideration next week. He said specific details were not revealed until the report's final adoption.

Barnard said he bet $5 and picked the winning numbers at random — some from a telephone number and the others were numbers he saw on the side of a taxi cab.

Pagano, a skilled carpenter, said he worked as a construction foreman for many years but was forced to retire in 1977 when he fell on his job site and broke his back.

"I was stunned," said Venero Pagano, 63, accompanied by his wife, Angelina, and two sons, Carmine and Joe, at a ceremony at Lotto headquarters in Manhattan.

He said he did not expect his new multimillionaire status to change his life dramatically and said he would continue to grow tomatoes in his back yard.

He said he watched the drawing of the six winning numbers on television Wednesday and woke up his wife to tell her they were multimillionaires.
