Mideast fighting; cease-fire broken

United Press International

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Moslem militiamen battled Lebanese army units in Beirut Sunday in the most extensive outbreak of fighting in the capital since a cease-fire went into effect July 4, radio reports said.

Christian Voice of Lebanon radio said Moslem gunmen and units of the army exchanged grenade and automatic weapons fire in downtown Beirut and near the Fuad Shebab and Sodeco crossing points of the Green Line.

The fighting near the Green Line dividing the mostly Moslem western half of Beirut from the Christian east, was the most extensive since the cease-fire was declared July 4, although there have been small-scale clashes between rival Moslem gunmen in west Beirut.

Police said the fighting started when a Palestinian was wounded in the leg near the Green Line and then gunmen took to the streets and mistakenly fought with soldiers of the Moslem 6th Brigade of the Lebanese army.

The Fuad Shebab and Sodeco crossings near downtown Beirut were recently opened when Christian and Moslem militiamen withdrew under the terms of the Syrian-backed security plan for the capital which ended more than nine months of sectarian violence.

Christian Voice of Free Lebanon said rocket-propelled grenades had exploded over the Christian residential area of Ashrafieh in east Beirut.

The fighting in the capital came as Prime Minister Rashid Karwan worked to halt another round of violence in the northern port city of Tripoli.
