Fruit growers blast Mexico import plan

United Press International
 ORLANDO, Fla. — A plan to allow Mexican limes into the United States from certain "canker-free" zones drew heavy opposition from Florida citrus growers who said the imports would threaten U.S. groves with disease.
 "The U.S. should embargo all citrus from Mexico until the canker is eradicated," said Diego Rodriguez, who grows limes in Dade County.
 The current outbreak of citrus canker, an incurable bacterial disease, affects only Key limes, a small variety that grows wild in the Florida Keys. Florida has about 7,300 acres of limes, mostly in south Florida.

It was discovered in Colima, Mexico, two years ago and has spread to other areas of Mexico, mostly on the Pacific coast. The United States has banned imports from infected areas.
 The only way to stop the spread of the disease is to uproot trees and burn them. The last outbreak in the United States occurred in 1912 and lasted 19 years. Florida growers had to destroy 3.2 million trees.

Florida officials told U.S. Department of Agriculture officials Tuesday, at the first of two public hearings, that Mexico has not taken sufficiently drastic steps to halt the spread.
 "There is a clear and present danger to Florida citrus," said Salvatore Alfieri, director of the Florida Department of Agriculture plant division.

No matter what plan is adopted, USDA officials have said they will require all Mexican citrus to be dipped in a bath of chlorine to kill surface bacteria.
 Felipe Romero, an official with the Mexican agriculture department, also opposed the plan. Romero said restrictive shipping zones are unnecessary because Mexico's major citrus growing areas are canker free.
 The USDA plans a second hearing Friday in San Antonio.

Jews, Arabs lock arms to stop Kahane's visit

United Press International
 UMM EL FAHM, Israel — Police prevented militant U.S.-born Rabbi Meir Kahane and dozens of his armed followers from entering Israel's largest Arab village Wednesday as some 4,000 Jews and Arabs locked arms to form a human chain and vowed to stop "Adolf Kahane."

Ten policemen were injured when a small group of Arab youths began hurling stones at them, prompting officers to fire tear gas.
 Police said no other violence was reported in the Arab village of Umm el Fahm, 40 miles northeast of Tel Aviv, where the mayor had warned of bloodshed if the Brooklyn-born Kahane was permitted to enter.
 Kahane, who won a seat in the Israeli parliament or Knesset last month on a platform to deport 2 million Arabs living in Israel and its occupied territories, went to Umm el Fahm to tell its residents to leave Israel forever. Umm el Fahm is Israel's largest Arab village, with 25,000 residents.

Acting on orders of police Commissioner Aryeh Ivtzan, officers stopped Kahane and three buses carrying dozens of his followers at a roadblock about two miles from the village.

Kahane then set out on foot for Umm el Fahm, which he called "a Jewish village that is temporarily inhabited by Arabs."

Hundreds of Jews traveled to Umm el Fahm and joined hands with Arabs to protest Kahane's visit in the biggest show of Israeli solidarity with Arabs since a wave of anger swept the nation after the 1982 Beirut massacre of Palestinians by Israeli-backed Lebanese Christian militia.
