DWI

Dr. Kirk Brown, president of the Brazos Valley chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Drivers (MADD), said 44,000 people were killed in the United States in 1983 in alcohol related accidents. He said the figure was over 51,000 for 1982.

Brown said he hopes rehabilitation programs like the one in Brazos County will continue to lower alcohol related fatalities.

"More can be done and faster through alcohol safety education programs to teach the public the dangers of mixing drinking with driving," he said.

Dr. Gerald Vinson is one of four Texas A&M professors certified to teach the alcohol education class in Brazos County. He has guided 250 people through the program in the last year and has been a traffic safety instructor since 1965.

Vinson said the course is broken down into four sessions:

- Introduction and the breakdown of hostilities
- Effects of alcohol on the driving task
- Problem drinking and alcoholism
- Personal action to avoid further DWI behavior

The TCA certified Brazos County's program in June 1983. Classes began two months later for offenders referred by Brazos County Courts.

Vinson said approximately half of the program's participants are Texas A&M students convicted of DWI offenses.

"With school in session again, I expect to see an increase in our enrollment of college students," he said.

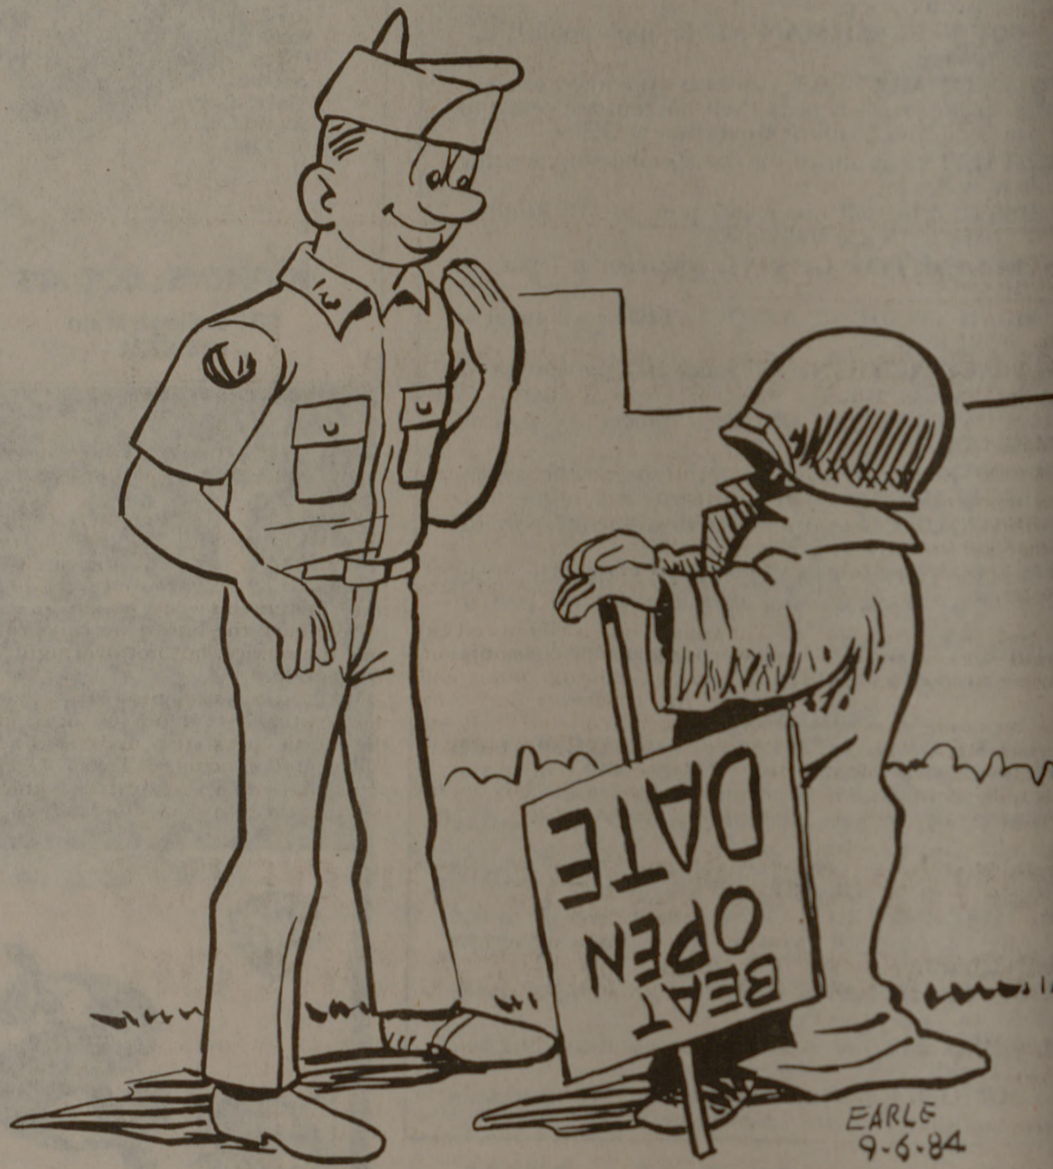

Interviews are held at the end of the class program to evaluate the student's progress and determine if further counseling is necessary.

As its primary goal, the program seeks to prevent persons convicted of DWI from becoming repeat offenders, Vinson said.

"It is a realistic approach in which our courts and community can follow through with doing something about this very serious social problem — the drinking driver," he said.
