Viking ship sailing around world

United Press International

NEW YORK — A modern-day Leif Ericson, on a journey around the world, arrived Wednesday in Manhattan with a seven-man crew from Norway in a Viking ship.

Ragnar Thorseth, 37, of Norway, in his attempt to duplicate Ericson's ancient voyage, had already put in at the Farao Islands, Iceland, Greenland, Halifax and Boston.

His Viking boat docked at the South Street Seaport for a week's inspection by the public before it sails up the Hudson to the Great Lakes, down the Mississippi River and onward to complete a voyage around the world.

About the year 1000, legend has it that Ericson's Vikings explored the shores of America after he and his crew sailed from Scandinavia in 50-foot wooden boats. He called the new land Vineland, for the grapes he found.

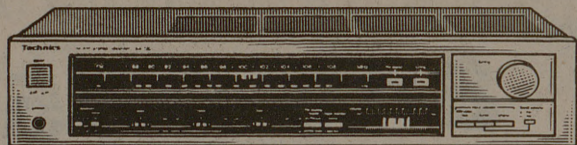

lar, or Sailor of the Sagas, set sail from the west coast of Norway June 17.

The boat, duplicating the ancient vessels, is wooden, about 56 feet long and 15 feet wide. A Norwegian flag flies from its stern.

He said the boat "is a bit clumsy looking ... but she is fast. We sailed several times in excess of 12 knots and with the proper wind and sea conditions could probably sail even faster."

Thorseth's ship, named Sara Sig-
