How To Get 2,000 Hours Of Great Music

Consider this: Drivers drive about two hours a day. Most listen to music as they roll along.

That adds up to 14 hours a week, or over 700 hours a year. Keep your car three years and that's over 2,000 hours of rock, classical, country western or whatever.

Our point: An hour invested now can save you 1,999 hours of not-so-hot listening up the road.

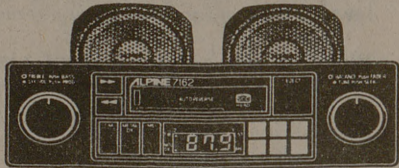

So bring in your favorite cassette, The Rolling Stones or Beethoven. Kick back and take an Alpine test-listen.

Odds are overwhelming you'll be blown away. Thanks to advanced Alpine electronics and our expert installation techniques, together creating The Alpine Touch.

Take the short drive to our place. It beats 1,999 miles of rocky road and roll, right?

Preteen charged for death

United Press International

FORT WORTH — Authorities Monday charged a 12-year-old girl, who admitted shooting an 11-year-old playmate, then hiding the body behind a hedgerow in her backyard, with two counts of engaging in delinquent conduct.

"In filing two counts, we can present evidence to the judge or jury and let them decide if the child is guilty and whether it was done intentionally or wrecklessly," said assistant District Attorney Joe Drago.

"If they decide it was a reckless killing, she will be found guilty of involuntary manslaughter. If they find it was intentional, they would find the child guilty of murder."

The Benbrook girl, who is being held in a Tarrant County juvenile detention center, admitted last week that she shot and killed Kerry Ann Thomas and hid her friend's body in her backyard, where it was found four days later.

The suspect, after confronted with mounting evidence, admitted last Wednesday she had killed her friend with a shotgun on Sept. 8, but said it was an accident.

A single blast from a shotgun struck Kerry in the face and killed her instantly as she drank from a glass of milk at the suspect's suburban Fort Worth home, police said.

The suspect dragged the body out of the house and into the back yard to a hedgerow behind the house, police said. Authorities said she had intended to dig a grave, but the ground was too hard so she covered the body with vinyl, wood and a laundry basket.

Police and neighbors mounted an extensive search after the suspect told the victim's mother Kerry had decided not to spend the entire weekend and had left for home on Saturday.

Drago said the case was unusual because of the ages of the children involved.

He said the suspect, if found guilty, could receive up to a year's probation, be placed in the custody of her family or other relatives or placed in a foster home or detention center.
