Young Democrats work for more members

By MIKE DAVIS Reporter

Texas A&M Young Democrats is not a large organization. But as the national election nears, Young Democrats' push for membership is increasing.

"We're not the first YD group ever at A&M; we've just reorganized and reworked our constitution," Garry Young, president of A&M Young Democrats, said. "But I've been told that we are quickly becoming the most active since A&M was a Democratic university.

Young said the organization, re-organized last spring, has about 50 active members, but he expects the membership will increase as the national election grows near.

"A&M is not the kind of campus where you can walk down the hall and find people who are oriented toward the Democratic Party," he said.

Young said the University has a large Democratic population, but few people will openly admit to be-

'People don't want to join a Democratic group and be a minority, even if they agree with you," Young said, but he remains optimistic about membership.

"One of the lucky things we have, being a minority group on campus, is that the people who join know why they are Democrats," Young said. "They're a lot more committed, gen-

Young said eight members of A&M Young Democrats were delegates at the state convention and two members were delegates at the national convention.

'The state Party knows we're here, and they take us seriously," he

Young said the push for active

Democratic membership on campus has already begun.
"We want to make ourselves really visible and make it easy for them to find us," he said. "That's really the only way we can do it.'

The main thrust for increasing membership is through the political speakers the group is bringing to campus, Young said.

Kent Caperton, Garry Mauro, Chet Edwards and Ann Richards are several of the state Democratic leaders scheduled to speak this semester. The one that we are really hopeful about is Kent Hance," Young said. "He is very much a conservative Democrat. The purpose for bringing him here is to show that you can be a conservative and be a Democrat

Young said that though the push for membership is strong, he hopes also to build a "permanent base" for Young Democrats at A&M.

"Right now it's easy to get peopinvolved," Young said. "They'r is terested in the presidential can paign and the U.S. senate campaign It's going to be a lot harder next when all you have is the boring legi

"Groups like the Republica groups are going to find that the will loose all that mass support the have," he said. "They're going find that they'll just have a hand (after the national election).

We will, too. Young has high hopes for the or ganization and expects it to be a man or political group by the '88 nations

"For a Democratic group to real become a force on campus it's gong to take time," he said. "You can'to it in a semester.

A&M Republicans push for voter registration

Victory '84, an organization

aimed at voter registration, is making a campus-wide search for hard core Republicans.

Matt Holley, chairman of Youth for Reagan, said the search is going so well that Texas A&M may set voter registration records.

"A&M is probably going to make history as far as the numbers that are turning out for registration," Holley

Holley, a senior industrial distribution major from Colorado Springs, Colo., said the organization's main purpose is finding the Republicans on campus and registering them before Oct. 5, the last day of voter registration.

The push for registration is aimed at getting straight-ticket Republicans

Texas A&M is the "focal point of the youth movement" in Texas because the University is so "overwhelmingly conservative," said Matt Holley, chairman of Youth for Reagan. "Because A&M is a very conservative school, they want to see how we organize the school to actually get the people out at registration," he said.

to the polls, Holley said.

"Our main push is for President Reagan, Phil Gramm and Joe Barton as well as Richard Smith," he said. Local Republican candidates also are included in the push, he said. In an effort to find the hard core Republicans, Victory '84 has combined the efforts of Youth for Reagan and Aggies for Barton to canvass the campus, Holley said.

"We're canvassing people through a political survey," Holley said, "to find out how they are going to vote so that we can see how A&M is slan-

The 300 members of Victory '84 are conducting the survey by phone and door-to-door, Holley said. A local bank has donated its phone lines to the group, and members are making walks through heavily populated areas and dorms, he said.

They are also registering people at the Republican Party table in the hallway of the Memorial Student Center, he said.

Texas A&M is the "focal point the youth movement" in Texas be cause the University is so "overwhe mingly conservative," he said.

Because A&M is a very conserva tive school, they want to see how we organize the school to actually the people out at registration," Holey said. "Even a lot of people washington are keeping an eye of what we're doing."
