reasons. One, to stretch the student. Two, put to work what they learn in acting class. Three, meet my needs as a director and four, have some kind of relevance to the community, national situation or the college."

Mitchell said she chose "Tango" because of the political year and the situation in Poland. "The characters are abstracts of human qualities and forces," Mitchell said. "They are mechanical manifestations of freedom and convention — Eddie representing freedom and Arthur representing convention. "Arthur is trying to restore the conventions of family, marriage and home," Mitchell said. "It's a ritualistic debunking of the myth of human progression," she said. "People are shown as instinctual beings — using reason in place of human-

Mitchell's production concept involves using the actors to find the sense of idealism that the characters have for freedom and convention. Allowing for a lot of creative freedom, the director, designer and the character Arthur will set the ideals that the rest of the cast comes in to destroy, she said.

"This play will use some of the techniques taught in the third year acting class. It requires a unique acting style," she said. "Tango" was first produced in Yugoslavia and Poland in 1965 and in New York in 1969. Mrozek and the play are now banned in Poland.
