Iowa State's $6 billion man becomes invisible receiver

By ED CASSAVOY
Sports Editor

Iowa State wide receiver Tracy Henderson came into Saturday's game billed as the six billion dollar man. He would do everything but kick field goals.

But as the final seconds ticked off the clock Henderson could best be described as the invisible man.

Iowa State came in with one game plan — throw the football.

But rather than being the starring attraction, ISU wide receiver Tracey Henderson became a mere footnote. Mere for Henderson adds up to a "paltry" 219 yards with 11 receptions.

"Sometimes they (A&M) play true man-to-man," Henderson said, "and two special — which is what we call two guys playing man-to-man, and one behind those two playing zone...everything they used we expected to see, so we had no problem reading their coverage."

The Aggie defensive plan was simple and effective. To neutralize the ISU passing game, they had to do two things — control Henderson, and shut down all other ISU receivers.

And the Aggies did just that. Iowa State quarterback Espinoza found himself in a Catch-22 situation. He had to throw to Henderson for the "big plays", but couldn't and was forced to dump the ball off to secondary receivers.

Iowa State brought only five running backs into the game to allow them an extra wide receiver.

Unfortunately for Espinoza, the three other ISU receivers — Robbie Minor, David Smoldt and Tommie Davis never were a factor in the game.

In the first quarter, Henderson received special attention from the Aggie secondary and Espinoza used Robbie Minor as the deep threat. Three times Espinoza tried to pierce the Aggie coverage, but Minor simply could not break free.

ISU Head Coach Jim Criner seemed to take the A&M loss realistically.

"A&M had three weeks to prepare for this game," Criner said, "so you can see why I am so proud of these guys. I've got a bunch of fighters on this team — that's how you win in the Big Eight."

as it was, and with as many freshman and sophomores we were forced to depend on, I am proud of the way the team played today."

Criner focused on the biggest ISU headache he saw during the game — a flood of rookie mistakes committed by Cyclone offensive players.

"If we hadn't had some protection breakdowns and our running backs making some bad decisions we could have kept some drives alive," Criner said. "Especially when the young backs were in the game, they made some bad decisions when they had things wide open. Our defense played their asses off. The best players on our team were on defense."

Criner was unhappy with the rash of penalties on both teams and complained about having a combination Southwest Conference and Big Eight officiating crew.

"We should had all Big Eight officials," Criner said. "That's not to say they will give them to us, but when you come down here you better bring them."

Espinoza's expression in the locker room said one thing — "I had nowhere to throw."

"They (A&M) had different varieties of coverages and different stunts — corner blitzes, etc," Espinoza said. "They were double teaming Tracy (Henderson) a lot in the first half, until we started to throw to our running backs. Then they started to come more with the free safety blitz or strong safety blitz."

Quarterback controversies are not the exclusive turf of A&M. Espinoza may be in a battle of his own to keep his starting position.

"This game experience has done a lot of good," Espinoza said. "It gave me the experience to go into the Big Eight. I am hoping that my last interception will not hurt my chances in a starting role."

Henderson commented on the obligatory double coverage he receives from the defense:

"Everytime they'd (ISU) throw a pass my way," Henderson said, "the next thing I know there's a linebacker out there trying to reroute me."

But when they come up man-to-man that's the fun part about it because it's me against you. I tell my line, if you hold a guy for four seconds, I'll get you the first down."

Throughout the interviews, one phrase spoken by Criner kept popping up.

"This is a tough way to learn," he said.

Did You Know...

There is more than one type of triathlon? In Britain a three-event triathlon could consist of horseback riding, trapshooting and fly-casting. These events derived from hunting, shooting and fishing, which the British love. A track-and-field triathlon involves a 100-meter dash, a high jump and a 4-kilometer (8lb., 13 oz.) shotput.

Here at Texas A&M, the Intramural Triathlon will be a 250 yd. swim, a 1.5 mi. run and a 4 mi. bike ride. Such a triathlon is classified as a recreational triathlon. The Intramural Triathlon will be held on October 7 through the campus. If you are not entered, go out and encourage the competitors.

SHAPE UP PROGRAM

It's time to incorporate fitness into your lifestyle and our SHAPE UP program is just the way to do it! Anyone can start "shaping up" at any time! How do you start your own personal SHAPE UP program? Well, first you drop by the Intramural-Recreational Sports Office and pick up an entry form and write down your name, address, and phone number and return the entry form to our Receptionist. Then you begin keeping track of your exercise program. Your goal should be to try to earn 250 points during the calendar year. Here's how the point system works:

1. Performance in the following aerobic activities earns points:
aerobic dance	1 hour	1 point
bicycling	3 1/2 miles	1 point
calisthenics	1 1/2 hour	1 point
racquetball/handball	1/2 hour	1 point
running/jogging	2 miles	1 point
swimming	1/2 mile	1 point
walking	3 miles	1 point

NOTE: EXERCISE MUST BE CONTINUOUS!!!!

2. After completing your activity, note the distance and/or time and date. As each activity is completed simply drop your tally cards by the Intramural-Recreational Sports Office and the staff will chart your individual progress. This chart will be displayed in a prominent and easily accessible area so that you can keep track of your progress.

3. And when you reach 250 points we will award you a free SHAPE UP Certificate.

When can you enter? Anytime you are ready to SHAPE UP! For further information please, feel free to drop by the Intramural-Recreational Sports Office, 159 East Kyle or phone 845-7826 today! The Office is open Monday through Friday from 8 AM to 6 PM.

There are still some Recreational Lockers available for rent.
