deeper. "Our argument is that official recognition is not protected by the First Amendment," Hajovsky said. Roberts said he felt the University was standing on weak ground. Three similar cases have been tried in different courts and in all three cases the courts have handed down rulings similar to the 5th Circuit Court's ruling, Roberts said.

The decision of the regents to appeal the decision was not unex-pected, Roberts and Coleman said. The meaning of the First Amend-ment is clear and will enterlished ment is clear and well-established, Coleman said.

Coleman also said he credited the GSS for their persistence in pursuing the matter

Rarely have I seen a group so courageous," he said. GSS is not yet a recognized on-campus organization, and Roberts said they will not be recognized until the Supreme Court makes a final de-

The System's prolonged battle will not endanger the future of GSS, Roberts said. In fact, because the University has battled the case up the legal ladder, the court's ruling has set legal precedents in five states, he said.

Card files help groups find lecturers

By LAUREN FLOURNOY Reporter

Campus organizations can now get help in finding guest lecturers by using a card file compiled by the Department of Student Affairs, says Nyla Ptomey, Housing Program supervisor

Each file card tells the topic for the lecture, the approximate length of each one and the best time to get in touch with the speaker to set up a date

The topics in the file include rec-reation, social events, education, hobbies and physical education, Ptomey said.

"If an organization is interested in getting a guest speaker, all they have to do is come look through the file," Ptomey said.

With so many professors at the University, it is hard not to find one that is interested in the topic that an organization might need, she said. The files are in the Housing Pro-grams office, the Student Activities office and the Memorial Student Center. The library and the Association Building office in the MSC are the next target locations.

"Any organization is welcome to use the file," Ptomey said. "It would be advisable to contact the speaker that your organization is interested in hearing a week in advance. This allows them to have the time to prepare their speech." The students don't pay a fee to use the file. The cost of photocopying each file and updating each one gram office, Ptomey said. The files are now being updated for the new school very school year.

Student Counseling Service Center opens its doors

By PAMELA WENTWORTH Reporter

Texas A&M's Student Counseling Service welcomed the campus community to the newly-renovated facili-ties in Room 300 of the YMCA Building Wednesday.

The open house gave the faculty and administrative staffs "an opportunity to see the facilities and what we are all about," Ron Lewis, asso-ciate director of the Student Counseling Service, said.

The new service provides academic, career and personal devel-opment to A&M students, he said.

The Academic Affairs Committee recommended that the Academic complete about one year ago. How-ever, Lewis said they wanted to finish the interior before they formally introduced the new center.

Among the many facilites offered is the Student Counseling Service li-brary. Students may visit the library any time for information on study skills, personal self-help books and college-career catalogs, Wade Birch, director of the Student Counseling Service, said. Students seeking professional help may visit the facilities in person or call in advance to set up an appointment. "If students feel they need counseling, it's best if they contact us as early in the semester as possible," Birch said.
