Rozier wants Oilers

United Press International

HOUSTON — The agent for Heisman Trophy winner Mike Rozier says now that the running back has reached an agreement to buy out his contract with the USFL's Pittsburgh Maulers and join the Houston Oilers.

However, Oilers general manager Ladd Herzog said he does not want to resume talks with Rozier until the season is over.

"We're not interested in Mike Rozier this season, but we will be willing to talk after the season," Herzog said.

Agent Art Wilkinson said if the Oilers won't sign Rozier this season, he wants Houston to trade his rights to another team.

"I can't let Mike sit out a full season," he said Wednesday. "I didn't break my butt on this deal to have him sit out for 18 months."

"Mike wants to play for the Oilers. We still feel Houston is the best place for him."

If Houston won't sign Rozier and refuses to trade his rights, Wilkinson says he has two alternatives.

"We can consider an action against the NFL supplemental draft," he said. "We feel there's a good chance the courts would declare Mike a free agent in the NFL."

Mike also might consider staying in the USFL but with another team. He will not return to the Maulers, but if they merge with another team, he might consider playing for the other team.

Houston Gamblers general manager Gene Burrough says the Maulers are one of five USFL teams to approach the Gamblers about the possibility of a merger.

The Oilers own Rozier's NFL rights and attempted to sign him earlier this season, but Rozier was not able to buy out of his contract with the Maulers.

Rozier, who won the Heisman at Nebraska last year, signed a $3.1 million personal-services contract with Maulers' owner Edward DeBartolo Sr.

"After a number of recent serious discussions with the Maulers, Mike has an agreement in principle to be relieved of his contractual obligations," Wilkinson said.

Cummings voices Ags' concerns

Many Texas A&M students would like to have the chance to talk about athletics with Head Football Coach Jackie Sherrill.

Scott Cummings, a senior, health education major from Aleif, has the chance to talk to Sherrill every month.

Cummings is the student representative to the Texas A&M University Athletic Council. The council makes recommendations to President Vandiver about the varsity athletic program.

"I have several responsibilities," Cummings said, "but the most important part of my job is to voice students' views to the council."

The athletic council is responsible for sending a delegate — a faculty representative from the council — to meetings of the NCAA, Southwest Conference and the College Football Association.

In addition to Sherrill, Associate Athletic Director John David Crow and other members of the Athletic Department staff usually attend the meetings, Cummings said.

"They report on academics, television contracts, facilities and the NCAA and SWC. We use the information they (the Athletic Department staff) give us to make our decisions."

Dr. Tom Adair, chairman of the athletic council, said, "The council discusses issues that will come before the NCAA, SWC or College Football Association. The appropriate representative meets with Vandiver and, together, they decide how the University will vote."

Cummings said he wondered if the faculty on the council would listen to his views.

"I was real nervous at first, but they listen and encourage me to let them know how the students feel," Cummings said. "John David Crow asked me to help think of ways to improve student enthusiasm about spring sports. We've been looking into the possibility of having an All University Night the first night of the spring semester."

"We are working with Dr. (John) Koldus, the yell leaders and the band, trying to improve participation in spring sports," Crow said. "We don't want to break any traditions or cause any problems."

"I just can't understand why, with 18,000 to 22,000 students attending every football game, we can't even get 2,000 to attend a basketball game."
