Employee allegations get results from NRC

United Press International

WICHITA, Kan. — Kansas Gas & Electric Company (KG&E) of Wichita will be fined $64,000 by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission for violations at the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant, an NRC spokesman said Thursday.

John Collins, NRC regional administrator in Arlington said the citation was issued after an investigation and hearing conducted by the U.S. Department of Labor into a discrimination complaint filed in August 1983.

Collins said that a former plant employee, James Wells, Jr., alleged he was disciplined and fired because he told KG&E's quality assurance manager about safety problems relating to electrical hardware and installation at the facility.

In June, Secretary of Labor Raymond Donovan upheld a decision by a department administrative law judge, stating that the employee protection provision of the Energy Reorganization Act of 1974 had been violated.

Collins said after the NRC reviewed the labor department's decision, the commission found KG&E also violated the commission's regulation. The commission was still conducting its own investigation into Wells' allegations.

In a letter received by KG&E Thursday, Collins said, "Discrimination by a commission licensee against an employee for engaging in certain protected activities is prohibited. The activities protected include reporting of quality discrepancies and safety problems."

KG&E must respond in writing to the complaint within 30 days. A KG&E spokesman declined immediate comment.
