tion — you'll get twenty different answers. Also, if you ask the same gypsy the same question twenty times — you'll get twenty different answers.

Over the years, the band has grown in numbers and wealth. Geoff and Melissa were mindful of their pocketbooks — the gypsies are a sly bunch. They violently oppose the invasion of their camp and set about to bewilder and flimflam the gadje (as they call outsiders). But the visit to the magic land wouldn't have been complete without seeing the people to whom yesterday is a memory and tomorrow is a song.

From the vagabonds' camp, the revelry and music of the King's Feast can be heard. Looking on from the outside (because Geoff and Melissa couldn't really part with the $50 necessary to chow down with His Royal Highness), the scholars watched the 124 people who did get to join the royalty for dinner. Inside the boundary of the Feast Hall a gastronomic extravaganza is in session.

The nearby Sherwood Forest has been alive with the flurry of preparation. Baskets overflowing with imported cheese and fruits, vegetables from the King's gardens and freshly baked breads are set before the voracious crowd.

Strolling minstrels and saucy wenches wander about grounds, awaiting the beginning of the feast. A crash of cymbals — enter the belly dancers. Serving lads strain under the weight of the heavy laden platters. Sight, sound, smell, taste and touch — all of the
