Superpowers

Soviets unleash anti-United States criticism

United Press International
MOSCOW — Tough new Soviet propaganda attacks calling President Reagan stubborn and Vice President George Bush a demagogue have dashed hopes that Moscow is softening its hard-line stance.
U.S. officials had hoped relations between the superpowers, which have become increasingly strained in the last year, might improve after Reagan met Sept. 28 with Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko in the White House. It was the first time Reagan met with a Soviet leader since becoming president.

The diplomat said, however, that a new barrage of anti-U.S. criticism unleashed by Moscow showed the Soviets had no intention of softening their hard-line stance.
"There was a feeling that the Reagan-Gromyko meeting could be a possible first step towards a new dialogue but instead the Soviet line is that, 'We tried to talk but they won't be reasonable,'" the diplomat said.
"The recent offensive indicates that they want to bring home the point that their hard-line position has in no way changed despite some optimistic reports in the Western press."

The Soviets Friday said the Reagan-Gromyko meeting accomplished nothing because the president was intransigent.
"The recent meeting between the Soviet foreign minister and the U.S. president showed... that the American side had no intention of modifying its position towards greater realism and peacefulness," the Novosibirsk news agency said in one attack.
Moscow also criticized the performances of both Reagan and Bush in their debates with Democratic challengers Walter Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro.

Report says VA likely to halt study of 600 Vietnam twins

United Press International
ST. LOUIS — The Veterans Administration is likely to cancel a highly publicized St. Louis-based study of Vietnam veterans, said a copyright report in Sunday editions of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.
The $9 million study of 600 twins would be directed by researchers at the St. Louis VA Medical Center. The center operates Cochran and Jefferson Barracks hospital for veterans.
Each set of twins would undergo physical, psychological and psychiatric tests in St. Louis to determine the impact of Vietnam service on the veteran.
An early stage of the study is already underway at a cost of $2 million. One part of the later stage would focus on the effects of exposure to dioxin, which contaminated a defoliant called Agent Orange that was used in Vietnam.

The VA has said in public statements for the past two years that it plans to perform the study. And earlier this year, a VA technical review committee gave the St. Louis researchers the go-ahead.
But last spring, Dr. Richard Greene, the head of medical research at the VA, appointed a new committee to re-evaluate the study. Some supporters of the study suspected that Greene opposed it as too expensive and was looking for a panel that would find problems with it.
On Aug. 30., the second panel concluded that the study should not go forward because of technical problems.
And knowledgeable officials in the VA, Congress and the scientific community say top officials in the VA are about to cancel the study partly because they consider it too costly. A draft of a memorandum disapproving of the study is being reviewed at the top levels of the VA newspaper said.

A spokesman for the VA confirmed that the agency was re-evaluating the need for the study, but declined to comment on cancelled reports.
The spokesman said that the view was justified by the high cost of the project and the large number of other studies being performed by Vietnam veterans.
The three principal investigators on the project — Dr. Seth A. East, William True and John Leavitt of the St. Louis VA Medical Center — declined to comment.

1 dead, 5 hurt in TDC stabbings

United Press International
ROSHARON — One inmate was stabbed to death and five others were wounded Sunday in a fight that broke out near a hallway of the Darlington Unit of the Texas Department of Corrections, a spokesman said.
A similar incident Saturday killed a black inmate and injured seven others at the Coffield state prison in East Texas.
The latest in the rash of stabbings occurring almost on a daily basis at TDC facilities this year raised the number of victims to 309. Twenty of those victims have died.
In the incident Sunday, the dead man had been stabbed 24 times, said TDC spokesman Phil Guthrie. Guthrie identified the victim as David Paul Alto, 26, who was serving a nine-year sentence on a burglary conviction from Harris County.

"We are not quite sure what happened today," said Guthrie. "There was a disturbance about 11:00 a.m. in the main hallway near the chapel. The inmates were out, going to feed or shower or were visiting. Initially, the staff got into the hallway where two inmates had been injured. They cleared the hallway but found three others in the area who had similar stab wounds. Then in a separate area in a shower they found the dead man who had been stabbed 24 times."

Guthrie said the institution was locked and extra staff called to conduct an investigation.
He said two of the injured, Richard Ybarra, 29, and Ruben Lopez, 19, were treated at the unit's infirmary for minor wounds.
The other three were taken to Abington Danbury Hospital. They were identified as Jamie Garcia, 19, serving a five-year sentence for burglary; Kenneth Louis Spencer, 21, serving 18 years for aggravated robbery with a deadly weapon; and Fidel Avila Abrego, 22, serving 10 years for aggravated rape.

Josephine heads north, near N.Y.

United Press International
MIAMI — A "jumpy" Hurricane Josephine, packing 85 mph winds, slowly bobbed northward in the Atlantic Sunday, leading forecasters to consider a hurricane watch for the New York City-Long Island area.
Gale warnings were in effect from Virginia Beach, Va., to Boston.
The hurricane stalled near Atlantic City, N.J. for several hours Sunday, but was expected to resume a northerly course today, possibly turning northeast and away from the coast.
The storm's path was "wobbly and jumpy," said forecaster Hal Gerrish at the National Hurricane Center in Miami.

"If it goes due north, it will hit Long Island," Gerrish said.
The east end of Long Island had high winds and heavy seas Sunday as the storm neared, but a ridge of high pressure building over the Midwest decreased the likelihood Josephine would make landfall, Gerrish said.
"The timing is still quite uncertain as to the effect of the cold water," Gerrish said. "If it moves much further north it will get over cold water and weaken."
The water temperature at Josephine's center was cooler than is considered favorable for further development.

Gerrish said storm tides of 2 1/2 feet above normal were likely to cause local flooding and beach erosion along the coast from Virginia Beach, Va., to Boston, where warnings were in effect. Forecasters said gale-force winds extended 200 miles out from Josephine's center.
The storm's steering currents have been weak since it formed in the Bahamas earlier this month. Weak steering currents make it difficult to predict a hurricane's path.

Queen enjoys holiday rest, visits museum

United Press International
BIG HORN, Wyo. — Queen Elizabeth II visited the Bradford Brimton Museum of western and Indian art Sunday on the third day of her rare private holiday in northern Wyoming.
Michael Shea, the British monarch's news secretary, said logistics prevented the queen from attending church Sunday, so she traveled to the museum instead to view paintings by such famed Western artists as Fredric Remington and Indian craft work.
She posed briefly for photographers and talked animatedly with Assistant Museum Director Dan Nelson about the museum, located at the former summer home of Brimton, a wealthy eastern industrialist who bought a ranch in the area and stocked the house with art objects.
The queen is scheduled to depart Monday for Britain and prepare for an upcoming visit with French President Francois Mitterrand.
Although the queen's arrival in Wyoming Friday closely followed the Irish Republican Army bombing of a Brighton Hotel where British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was staying, the queen nonetheless was reported to be enjoying her private stay.
