Illegal net possible cause of crash, investigator says

HARLINGEN — A World War II seaplane that crashed into shallow water killing six people including one woman and injuring four others may have struck metal stakes supporting an illegal gill net stretched across the Laguna Madre, a National Transportation Safety Board investigator said Tuesday.

"Based on an examination of the wreckage, it appears that the aircraft hit some object that was extending above the water," Warren Wandel, who heads the NTSB team investigating the crash, said by telephone from Fort Worth. "It was probably some stakes off of a gill net — the gill net we found wrapped around part of the fuselage."

The Confederate Air Force, which boasts the world's largest collection of flyable World War II aircraft, said the flight manifest showed that Hall was the pilot and Allmond was the co-pilot, but Hall had insisted Allmond was at the throttle when the plane went down last Saturday.

The CAF PBV-6A flying boat cartwheeled Saturday in about 18 inches of water in the Laguna Madre while making a simulated landing for a photo mission prior to the CAF's Airshow '84 reenactment of World War II air battles.

Hall and Jerry Gardner, 41, of Tyler, listed as the engineer on the flight, had been released from Valley Baptist Hospital by Tuesday.

Wandel said the plane was flying about two feet above the water when it apparently hit something and flipped upside down. He said he saw a couple of gill nets in the crash area.

However, Texas Parks and Wildlife supervisor Bobby Miles vehemently disputed that a gill net could have downed a plane, saying very few of the illegal nets are used along the coast and that when they are, they are below the water and anchored to wooden stakes.

Still hospitalized Tuesday in critical condition with a broken neck was Homer Schutz, 60, of Kilgore, who was deputy safety officer of the CAF's Lone Star Wing, headquartered in Tyler. Schutz's wife, Bobbie, 55, historian of the wing, was buried Tuesday in Kilgore.

Miles said one of his wardens who went to the scene said the webbing in question was a cargo net from the plane.

Dan Shields, 34, of Tyler, the East Texas CAF wing's finance officer, also remained hospitalized, but his condition had been upgraded from guarded to good.

Besides Allmond and Mrs. Schutz, also killed in the crash were Robert B. Ennis, 60, of Concord, Calif.; Joseph Cromer, 65, Tyler; William "Joe" Dacus, 58, Jacksonville, and Dr. Oliver Patterson, 66, Sapulpa, Okla.

Nurse tours Soviet facilities

Health care primitive

SAN ANTONIO — Public health care in the Soviet Union is primitive, said a Texas nurse who toured medical facilities in five Russian republics this summer.

While some Soviet hospitals have specialized equipment, including items made in the United States, other facilities lack up-to-date technology and are poorly stocked with drugs, said Sharon Hoffman, associate dean of graduate nursing at the University of Texas Health Science Center.

"It varies, but there are things there that are very primitive," she said. "They still use mud packs and mud therapy. There's no disposal equipment like syringes or trays. They were working with old, old small sterilizers. The kind of things we saw here in the '50s."

Hoffman said Soviet emergency rooms appeared to have few drugs on hand, and at one hospital she saw a glass cabinet with only three or four bottles.

"Everywhere there is the lack of ordinary equipment," she said.

She said she also got the feeling that Russian citizens have trouble getting access to health care facilities.

"They have to be referred on and on and on," she said. "We saw clinics for the average citizen, but I don't think they have accessibility to high level care. The number of physicians is higher than the rate in the U.S., but they're not as sophisticated."

In the public clinics, the great majority of physicians are women, Hoffman said, but male physicians have greater opportunities to specialize and work in higher quality facilities.

Hoffman said it also was difficult to identify personnel in public clinics because they all dressed the same.

"It's difficult to tell who's the

FBI reveals record rare stamp find

United Press International

CLEVELAND — An FBI investigation of the largest postage theft in U.S. history resulted in recovery of $500,000 in rare stamps. But the statute of limitations is run out on charging anyone with crime, the FBI said Tuesday.

The 153 stamps, part of the Benjamin K. Miller Collection, were taken from the New York Public Library on May 9, 1977. So far, authorities have recovered 82 stamps that the American Philatelic Society says are worth $500,000, including 30-cent stamp from 1867 with a value of $30,000.

Following the burglary, FBI agents and New York police officers launched a massive search for a stamp thief, but made no arrests.

It was not until 1982 that one of the stolen stamps surfaced. The stamp was an 1918 8-cent stamp called the "inverted blue" because the misprinted design showed a World War I airplane called a Jenny, flying upside down.

Investigators traced the stamp to Jenny to stamp dealer Lambert Gerber of Tamaqua, Pa., who said Gerber has died and the whereabouts of knowing if he knew stamps were stolen.

FBI agents discovered 60 stamps that were part of Gerber's estate, but were able to locate the other stamps by checking his records.

Other dealers, who did not know the stamps were stolen, turned them over to authorities.

The stamps are in the custody of the U.S. District Court in New York. Griffin explained that legal proceedings imposed by a federal grand jury prevented any public comment on the recovery of the stamps.

Griffin said agents have not exhausted the "Gerber connection" but are continuing to investigate stamp thefts. The statute of limitations for the New York theft has expired, he said.

Authorities suspect that there are 20 thieves who specialize in rare postage stamps. Some $1.5 billion in rare stamps were stolen in 1981.

Groups call for asbestos removal

AUSTIN — A coalition of Texas unions and education organizations Tuesday called on the Reagan administration to order the Environmental Protection Agency to step up efforts to remove cancer-causing asbestos from school buildings.

"We are asking President Reagan to replace EPA officials handling the asbestos problem with people who care about our nation's children," said Mike Twombly, spokesman for the coalition.

Twombly said Reagan should also require the EPA to develop standards for removing asbestos from schools and allocate money "to prevent health problems for children in the future."

The Texas coalition includes the Texas State Teachers Association, Service Employees International Union, Texas Federation of Teachers, Labor Council for Latin American Advancement and Public Citizens.

The EPA banned all new uses of asbestos in 1978, but Twombly said the Reagan administration "has never requested a dime to protect school children and school workers from asbestos in schools despite the cancer risk."

Asbestos was widely used between 1940 and 1970 for insulation, fireproofing and soundproofing in buildings. The breathing of asbestos fibers can cause lung cancer and asbestosis, a serious scarring of lung tissue.

An EPA report issued in July estimated that 15 million school children and 1.4 million school workers are exposed to asbestos.

Twombly said the coalition decided to make its comments public because of a statement made Sept. 26 by John A. Moore, the EPA's assistant administrator for toxic substances.

Moore told a subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee that the EPA would not request Congress to appropriate funds for asbestos cleanup in schools for 1985-1986 fiscal years because it would encourage schools to do their own cleanup efforts without federal money was available.

Conservative estimates placed the cost of the nationwide cleanup effort at $1.4 billion.

Congress passed the Superfund Hazard Abatement Act in 1984, which authorized $600 million over a seven-year period for asbestos inspection and removal. Twombly said Congress appropriated $1 billion, but the EPA has not requested the money.

Of Texas' 1,100 schools, the EPA has inspected 118 for compliance with a requirement that schools be tested for asbestos. Twombly said 36 were not inspected.
