

Britain cancels low-cost fares

United Press International
LONDON — The British government ordered airlines Thursday to stop selling unauthorized low-fare tickets for trans-Atlantic travel and also ruled invalid 130,000 tickets already issued.

The abrupt action affects 12 U.S. and British air carriers, including Trans World Airlines, Pan American World Airways, British Airways and British Caledonian, and the tickets they sold for flights between Nov. 1 and March 31.

"We're disappointed that the British are not going to allow consumers to take advantage of the low fares," a Civil Aeronautics Board spokesman said in Washington, adding that talks on the action are expected at the State Department.

Travelers who bought low-cost tickets averaging $325 must either cash them in or pay up to $63 extra, the British Department of Transport said.

Two low-fare carriers whose bargain prices have been approved by government regulators, America's People Express and Britain's Virgin Atlantic, were not affected.

Fares between New York and London range from $1,509 for the supersonic Concorde to $149 on People Express.

"We will not permit the actual selling or advertising or collecting of names for fares without government approval," British Aviation Minister Michael Spicer told a news conference. "If the airlines are carrying people with these fares, they are carrying them illegally."

Thursday's action was the latest in an escalating battle between the United States and Britain over an airline antitrust dispute.

British officials were worried that the U.S. government might use the new low fares in future antitrust actions against British airlines.

Such a suit filed by the defunct Laker Airways alleges several major carriers conspired to drive Sir Freddie Laker out of business by collectively lowering fares.

"All we are concerned about is the health and stability of the Atlantic routes," Spicer said. "We have acted to prevent commercial chaos."

Spicer, who told reporters he explained his department's action to the affected airlines, said, "They were not the happiest people ... (but) the impression we had is that they will comply."

Girl's sentence called too harsh

United Press International
FORT WORTH — The attorney of a 12-year-old girl found guilty of delinquency-involuntary manslaughter in the shooting death of her best friend said Thursday he will appeal the sentence, which he called needlessly harsh.

Judge Scott Moore ruled Wednesday that the girl be given to the care of the Texas Youth Commission for the shooting death of 11-year-old Kerry Thomas of Benbrook.

Defense attorney Harold Calvin Ray described the sentence as "the harshest extreme possible. It is contrary to the advice of two psychiatrists, one who was appointed by the court and one for the defense, but they reached the same conclusion, that it would be adverse to place her in an institution."

Ray said the girl is being sent away from everything that is normal in her life. He said he plans to file an appeal today.

Moore, who pondered possible sentences about two weeks, said Thursday he could not give probation to the girl because of the actions taken to hide the crime. The victim's body was hidden in a hedgerow for four days before it was discovered.

The girl's sentence, Moore said, "is for any period of time but not to exceed her 18th birthday."

Ray had asked that Moore grant a one-year probation as a maximum sentence because the jury had found "an accident occurred that possibly could have been avoided."

Moore said the girl would probably be sent to one of TYC's community placements, such as a girls' ranch, after psychiatric testing.

"If she needed care longer than one year she could get it at TYC," Moore said.

Court records show the girl is being sent to TYC on a charge of being a delinquent child, based on an Oct. 12 jury decision that she committed involuntary manslaughter. The records also recommend that the girl receive psychological care.

Kerry Thomas died from a shotgun wound to her face on Sept. 8. A neighbor found her body buried under debris four days later in the suspect's backyard.

Prosecutors sought to prove that the girl intentionally killed her classmate out of jealousy over an 18-year-old male cousin, who had lived with the girl's family.

During the trial, Ray told jurors a mix of immaturity and panic compelled his client to hide the body, clean up the blood and deny knowledge of the victim's disappearance until the body was found.
