Court says Raiders stay in LA.

United Press International
WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court threw the National Football League for a loss Monday in an action that will keep the Super Bowl champion Raiders in Los Angeles and may cost the league $55 million.

The NFL had argued that federal antitrust law should not apply to relocation decisions by sports leagues. But the justices refused the case without comment, thus clearing the way for the Raiders, formerly of Oakland, to remain in Los Angeles and for other sports franchises to relocate more freely.

Action in the Raiders' case now shifts to San Francisco, where a federal appeals court must decide whether to uphold a $55 million jury award — $40 million for the Raiders, and $15 million for the Los Angeles Coliseum.

In New York City, an NFL spokesman said the league would ask the Supreme Court to review the "important issues" in the case again after the appeals court acts.

"We are disappointed that the Supreme Court chose not to review the interim lower court rulings in the Raiders' case at this time," the spokesman said.

The Raiders' move has been embroiled in litigation since 1979 when controlling partner Al Davis contested the NFL's effort to block his team's move to Los Angeles.

He eventually prevailed, and the Raiders are playing their home games in the Los Angeles Coliseum for the third season.

Aggie wide receiver makes an acrobatic leap between two Mustang defenders to snatch a Craig Stump pass. Teal's reception helped keep the Aggie drive alive and set up A&M's second field goal of the game. The Aggie effort fell short as they lost 28-20 to SMU Saturday. Sherrill's Aggies have a week off before battling Arkansas Nov. 17.

Presidents like the sporting life

White House plays games

United Press International
In trivial pursuit of U.S. presidents and their achievements and non-achievements in the world of sports:

Presidents Gerald Ford and Ronald Reagan were the closest to the sports world of U.S. presidents — Ford as a player and Reagan as a pioneer radio broadcaster.

Ford was a center on the University of Michigan football team in the 1930s and considered a much better than average college player although President Lyndon Johnson once remarked, "He played too many times without his helmet."

Richard Nixon, whom Ford replaced as president, also was on his college football team at Whittier in California, although he spent much of his time on the bench. Nixon also was a great baseball fan.

Reagan, known as "Dutch," recreated sports events — mostly track meets — for radio station WHO in Des Moines, Iowa, during the 1930s. He also announced an estimated 600 baseball games for the Chicago Cubs and 45 football games for the University of Iowa.

Reagan's fondest memory of his sports broadcasting career was covering the 21-game winning streak of the 1935 Cubs.

Reagan was covering the Cubs at their Catalina Island spring training site off the California coast in 1937 when he had his first screen test. Three years later he won the part of George Gipp in "The Knute Rockne Story."

President Calvin Coolidge holds the presidential record of most consecutive World Series games attended by a president. Coolidge and his wife attended the three games of the 1924 Series played in Washington, D.C. It was one of the most exciting Series and was won by the Senators over the New York Giants, four games to three.

The taciturn and often aloof Coolidge is well remembered for a meeting with Harold "Red" Grange, the famed Galloping Ghost of the Illinois, after the player turned professional with the Chicago Bears.

"What do you do for a living?" Coolidge asked Grange.

"I'm with the Chicago Bears," replied Grange.

"That's nice," said Coolidge, "I like animal acts."

President Dwight Eisenhower played football at Army and was an avid golfer and bridge player. President John Kennedy was a sailing enthusiast and played touch football with his family. He also was an excellent golfer but he de-emphasized his interest in the sport because he thought the slow-moving game might detract from his image of a young and virile president.

Woodrow Wilson was the first president to attend a Series game traveling from Washington, D.C., to Philadelphia, Oct. 9, 1915 to throw out the first ball in the second game of the Series.

William Taft, Franklin Roosevelt, Herbert Hoover, Eisenhower, Jimmy Carter and Reagan were other presidents who attended Series games while in office.

Among other presidents, Andrew Jackson was an expert with pistol and rifle, Abraham Lincoln was said to be a good wrestler, U.S. Grant was known as a superb horseman and Harry Truman was renowned for his brisk, early morning walks.
