Official bothered about exemptions for country clubs

United Press International
AUSTIN — The chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee said Tuesday he was upset that the state comptroller's office decided to exempt country club dues from a new state sales tax on amusements.
"The reason I'm upset is that we didn't want someone to be able to say 'here we are taxing a poor kid going to the movie, but not the millionaire going to the country club,'" said Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen.
"That's a big deal, that's a big hit (on revenues)," said Schlueter, noting that some country club dues range as high as $10,000 per year.
But Claudia Stravato, deputy comptroller, said a tax policy committee within the comptroller's office decided country club dues should not be taxed because they are "purely social in nature and not an amusement."
She said fees collected for golf and tennis at country clubs are taxed.
But Schlueter said it was the Legislature's intent that country club dues be taxed as an amusement.
"In the future, if you have any problem understanding what the bill meant, call me," Schlueter told Stravato.
Stravato outlined several problems experienced by consumers and merchants. She said the comptroller's office has logged 121,000 telephone calls about the new taxes. She has hired 85 of the 120 new workers needed to administer them.
One problem, she said, is that the state is being forced to issue sales permits to some 10,000 children who are newspaper carriers in Texas.
Stravato said the new tax on newspaper sales is causing headaches because parents are being forced to sign contracts for their children's newspapers who now come under the sales tax.
The paper carriers, many of them minors, also must collect and keep detailed records on sales receipts.
"We simply would like to see the exemption restored," said Stravato.
She said the comptroller's office has asked the attorney general's office for an advisory opinion on the constitutionality of the newspaper tax. She said lawyers for the comptroller believe the tax may be unconstitutional because it impedes the First Amendment rights of newspapers.
Stravato also said merchants are having trouble figuring the new eight sales tax because of the numbered rate.
"That is our most consistent complaint," she said. "They can't compute it in their heads and many of them can't compute it."
If merchants round down the figure, they must make up the deficit and if they round it up, the excess must be paid to the state, she said.

Maverick minister arrested at the altar

United Press International
PITTSBURGH — A fired minister who locked himself in a church for more than a week was arrested on Tuesday and carted off to jail to serve a 90-day sentence for defying a court order.
"I must obey God and not man," the Rev. D. Douglas Roth told Allegheny County Common Pleas Judge Emil Narick in refusing to comply with a court order barring him from preaching at the Trinity Lutheran Church in Clairton.
"I will not talk to courts that have corrupt decisions that interfere with religion," Roth said.
After the 20-minute hearing, Narick fined Roth $1,200 and sent him off to a Pittsburgh jail to serve a 90-day sentence on civil contempt charges.
"He can purge himself at any time," Narick said. "He has the key to the jailhouse in his pocket."
Narick said everyone must obey the law, adding that Roth would be freed if he promised to comply with the court order.
"To do otherwise would make a mockery of the law," he said. "When you make announcements to the public about disobeying the law ... you must accept the consequences," referring to Roth's Sunday sermon in which he said: "I am not called to appear before courts and judges."
Roth was suspended on Oct. 17 by Bishop Kenneth May of the West Virginia-Western Pennsylvania Synod of the Lutheran Church for supporting the Denominational Ministry Strategy, a controversial clergymen's activist group.
Since his suspension, Roth has delivered a sermon every Sunday in defiance of May's order, but on Nov. 2 Narick upheld the bishop's action and ordered Roth to stop preaching.
Roth ignored the judge's order and barricaded himself inside his former church Nov. 5, skipping a Friday hearing on a contempt of court citation.
The minister had previously said if he were to be arrested for defying the court order, he must be taken from his altar. Two Allegheny County sheriff's deputies arrested Roth Tuesday morning from the church.
May said he had appointed a five-member committee to investigate whether Roth is guilty of "willful disregard of the constitution and laws" of the church.
The maximum penalty would be "disposition," barring him from heading any church in the Lutheran Church in America. The committee will hold its first meeting in two weeks, May said.
