Ags find glass slipper tight fit

Cinderella appeared twice this fall season, taking center stage in both cases. However, her carriage turned into a great Orange pumpkin before she could return home.

The Texas A&M volleyball team and the TCU football team both began the season as decisive underdogs, but in the end they were both trying on the Southwest Conference slipper.

The Aggies reached as high as No. 12 on the NCAA News poll. They defeated Texas Tech and Texas was upset by Houston. This led to a Nov. 14 showdown with the Horns for the championship.

Likewise, the Horned Frogs were ranked No. 12. They defeated Texas Tech while Texas was upset by the Cougars. Once again, the championship game had been set. Cinderella against the Orange Force on Nov. 16.

Nov. 14 came and the first of two important games was at hand. The Ags threw out the red cape and the bull charged.

The Ags returned from the arena bruised, battered and outscored. Cinderella hadn't reached home before her curfew.

Thus, fate had already determined the outcome of the Texas-TCU game. The Horned Frogs were destined to lose. The final — 44-23.

The Aggies finished the regular season 34-4 and 8-2 in conference. The Frogs, who are currently 8-2, will end their regular season against, ironically, Texas A&M.

The Horned Frogs will probably receive a bid to play in the Bluebonnet Bowl. The Aggies are waiting to receive word on whether they will be invited to the post-season tournament. Saturday, both teams will know for sure.

The similarities between the two teams go back to last season. TCU had a terrible season, winning only one game under first-year Head Coach Jim Wacker.

The Ags had a mediocre season, winning one more game than they lost.

After the season, the Ags brought in a new assistant coach, Mardi Alexander. Most of the Aggie players agree Alexander, teamed with Head Coach Terry Condon, has been a key to the Ags success.

Everyone will agree Wacker has turned the Horned Frogs program around.

1985 looks promising for both teams, as most of the starters will be returning including All-American candidates Sherri Brinkman and running back Kenneth Davis.

1984 was only the beginning. Cinderella may find the right slipper next season and ride away in the prince's carriage instead of turning back into a toad.

Guilty New York Jet's Gastineau escapes to Rikers Island

United Press International
NEW YORK — New York Jets defensive end Mark Gastineau escaped a jail term Tuesday and was instead sentenced to 90 hours of coaching football at Rikers Island for assaulting a patron last year at the swank Studio 54 disco.

Gastineau, considered the best defensive end in pro football this year, had faced up to one year in jail and a $1,000 fine for fracturing a man's nose at the fast-lane Manhattan night club in the early morning hours of Sept. 30, 1983.

Judge Alan Marrus, who presided at Gastineau's trial, sentenced the football star to 90 hours of community service — conducting a football clinic for prisoners between the ages of 16 and 21 awaiting trial at Rikers.

Marrus said the sentence would provide community service for the benefit of young people who hold Gastineau in such high regard.

"I am sending you to Rikers Island — not as an inmate, but as a teacher," Marrus said. "The way you perform this community service will demonstrate how big a man you are."

Gastineau, whose wife, Lisa, and mother were with him in the full courtroom, said he was satisfied with the sentence. He maintained his innocence to the end, however, and said the only thing he would have changed was his decision not to testify in his own defense.

"I suffered a lot," Gastineau told the court. "I did play very well during the trial. And maybe I need a trial every week. I worked very hard to get a name that is respectable. And it has been somewhat destroyed."

Marrus said that in deciding against a jail sentence, "I accept the fact that you are not a criminal in the true sense of the word. The only people who should be afraid of you are the players in the National Football League."

In rejecting the fine, Marrus said, "For you, a $1,000 fine would be like taking a drop of water from the Atlantic Ocean."

However, Peter Morrison, Gastineau's attorney, said his client had lost a number of personal endorsements from commercial enterprises because of the trial.

Gastineau, 27, was convicted Sept. 12 in Manhattan Criminal Court on assault charges. Teammate Ken O'Brien, 23, who was out with Gastineau that night, was acquitted of assault.

Witnesses testified the brawl began after the 6-foot-5, 270-pound football player, known for his showmanship before crowds, lost an arm-wrestling contest with a bartender.

Disco patron John Benson, 22, of New York, and club owner Marc Fleischman were injured in the fight and Benson was treated at St. Clare's Hospital for a fractured nose and cuts. Neither was admitted to the hospital.

Benson filed the complaint against the football players.

The free-for-all began about 2:20 a.m. after 175-pound bartender Scott Baird beat Gastineau in an arm-wrestling competition.

Gastineau told Baird he wanted another try, according to Fleischman, but "the bartender realized the guy was really mad and didn't want to do it. Then somebody bumped into Gastineau and he (Gastineau) smashed him in the face. The guy just sort of brushed against him."
