Gas pipeline explodes killing five

United Press International
JACKSON, La. — Five people were killed and at least 19 others injured Sunday afternoon when a 30-inch natural gas pipeline exploded, burning the countryside and shooting flames high into the air, authorities said.

Bill Daniels, West Feliciana Parish sheriff, said clocks for more than a one-mile radius stopped as the huge blast ripped through the remote area about 25 miles north of Baton Rouge.

None of the dead or injured had been identified late Sunday.

"It looked like a bomb had been dropped," a witness at the scene said. "There were smoldering tree stumps with white ash and no leaves on any trees for several hundred feet."

Jim Young, a spokesman for Texas Eastern Gas Pipeline Co. of Houston and the owner of the ruptured line, said the steel pipeline is part of a major artery that supplies natural gas from East Texas to the eastern seaboard.

"Contractors have been doing a DOT replacement," Young said late Sunday. "The Department of Transportation requires that we periodically inspect and replace a section of pipeline, and we found a section that needed replacement."

"They were to have tied in the line last night, apparently they did because gas was flowing through it today and (crewmembers) were on the scene about to wrap up the job when it ruptured. We don't know exactly why."

The gasline to the ruptured pipe was shut off and the blaze burned out was extinguished by 3 p.m. as the fire burned itself out, Daniels said.

search. We have to see what the faculty wants to do and then help them with resources.

"The type of work the faculty wants to do here does aim at world impact."

Vandiver says another plus for A&M is its status as a land grant university.

"The tradition of service is most essential because these are institutions that will take problems of world concern and deal with them," he says. "The land grant institution has been doing things like that on a smaller scale since 1862."

"It's set up already toward an outreach: extension services, experiment stations, that kind of thing; so the organization is not unknown to them, working beyond the confines of the campus."

Vandiver says his reasons for including A&M in these plans have been misinterpreted by many of the students. There has been a marked tendency to add the word 'class' to his 'world university' and thereby distort it.

"It's one thing to be a world-class university and quite another to be world university, the way I see it," says. "When you say world class, it simply limit the vision."

"World class means, to me, known in certain parts of the world. Well, we're already that. But a university is an institution that operates to the betterment of the world, all over the world."
