Squadron runs game ball to UT

By BRITTANY MILLHOLLAND

As the Aggie bonfire burned Thursday night, another Aggie tradition was to have taken place. Carrying a game ball given to them by Texas A&M Head Football Coach Jackie Sherrill, Squadron 7 members were to have made their fifth biennial "run to t.u."

The tradition started in 1976 to raise money for the Christian Children's Fund and has continued every two years since, said Eddie Elizalde, a senior in the outfit.

The relay begins after the entire squadron runs around the bonfire twice. The first runner leaves from the fish parking lot carrying the ball on a 14-hour run to Memorial Stadium in Austin.

Each team member waits in cars stationed at half-mile intervals. Each person runs a half-mile to the next car as a car follows him. The runner hands the ball off to another runner waiting at the next car.

Hijacker gives up

United Press International

ATLANTA — A mental patient surrendered to authorities Thursday after hijacking a commuter plane at Hartsfield International Airport, holding the pilot hostage and threatening to blow up the aircraft.

FBI agents said the hijacker, identified as Judson Dean Talley, 26, came out an emergency exit of the 19-passenger Eastern Metro Express plane, lit a cigarette and was taken into custody. Talley was immediately charged with hijacking.

No one was harmed during the four-hour incident. Authorities said Talley was a mental patient who had been released Wednesday from the Georgia Regional Hospital in Augusta, a psychiatric care facility.

Talley released the 10 passengers and co-pilot Tia Weaver shortly after taking command of the plane at 10:46 a.m. on a flight from Augusta, Ga., but kept the pilot aboard the aircraft, a twin-engine turboprop.

The hijacker told authorities he had explosives and would blow up the plane if they did not bring his mother and girlfriend to him by 3 p.m. Talley's girlfriend arrived at the airport about 2:50 p.m. and authorities said she helped persuade him to surrender.

Pollution found near Dallas

United Press International

WASHINGTON — The Texas Department of Water Resources reported Thursday it found evidence of groundwater contamination — including the carcinogen vinyl chloride — at a pesticide plant site near a creek that feeds into Dallas' main water supply.

"The data revealed some groundwater contamination at the Zocon (Industries) site," state environmental quality specialist Michael Dick said.

Tests revealed the presence of pesticides, solvents and vinyl chloride and showed shallow groundwater contamination at low levels, Dick said.

The findings lent support to a citizen's movement led by Shane Jackson, a resident of Farmers Branch, who has tried unsuccessfully to force the Environmental Protection Agency to test soil and water samples from the site less than six miles from the main Dallas water station.

Jackson began his struggle nearly two years ago to halt the installation in Farmers Branch of a $2.5 million, 22-acre city park right beside the pesticide-producing plant.

Dick said he did not know whether the findings posed a threat for Dallas. He has asked the company for more information about the contamination and plans to meet with company officials next week.
