Tatum tears ligaments as Langston leads Aggs

By BRANDON BERRY
Sports Writer

On a night in which the Texas A&M women's basketball team frequently misfired, Lisa Langston really hit the spot. She also hit 11 of 20 field goals and nine of 10 free throws to spearhead the Aggies' 77-66 win over Stephen F. Austin in G. Rolie White Coliseum.

A&M outshot SFA 42.3 percent to 41.8 percent from the field and took 19 more free throws than the Ladyjacks. However, the Aggies were out-rebounded 49-35 and were generally banged, battered and bruised under the basket.

"I was not pleased," A&M Coach Lynn Hickey said. "I was pleased with the win, but I wasn't pleased with how we played. We lacked intensity."

"We are 4-1 on the season, though, and we're taking them one game at a time. Every win is important."

However, while the win was not particularly impressive, it was quite expensive. Junior center Michell Tatum re-injured ligaments in her left knee after returning for the first time in two weeks.

Hickey said the second injury is more severe than the first and might sideline Tatum for the rest of the season.

Even with Tatum's six-foot, three-inch body doing battle in the middle of the lane, the Ladyjacks pumped the ball inside from the outset of the game, mostly to freshman Antoinette Norris.

Norris, a six-foot center with approximately the same width as a Redskins' offensive lineman, had 15 first half points to go with 10 rebounds. At the half, the SFA team as a whole had as many offensive rebounds as the Aggies had total rebounds.

A&M regrouped around the eight early points of senior forward Jenni Edgar and took a 39-35 half-time lead, despite a seeming lack of intensity and a futile zone defense.

"She (Coach Hickey) really let us have it at halftime," senior Mary Ann Swearngin said. "We knew we had to be more intense in the second half."

The Aggies opened the half in a man-to-man defense, full court-pressed at every opportunity, and seemed determined to out-quick the inexperienced Ladyjacks.

Using sophomore Rochelle Bennett off the bench, A&M cut off the passing lanes and began making their own scoring opportunities after steals.

Langston willingly became the baker and roasted the Ladyjacks' turnovers, scoring 16 second half points on an assortment of twisting lay-ups and long-range jumpers. She scored nine consecutive A&M points and sent the Aggies off to the races by expanding a 53-47 lead to 63-47 with five minutes remaining.

Stephen F. Austin's Stacey Cloud attempts to tie up the ball, but A&M's Janet Duckham seems determined to keep control. The Aggies, 4-1 on the season, defeated the Ladyjacks 77-66 Wednesday night in G. Rolie White Coliseum.

With the premature departure of the rotund Norris due to fouls, the last obstacle to an A&M victory was gone. A 10-foot jumper by Langston with three seconds left on the shot clock and a following rim-rattling lay-up by Holly Hodges were the final nails in the SFA coffin. Three minutes of garbage-time later, the Aggies were victorious; they were also asking questions about the future.

"The quick line-up and the aggressive defense are what we have to do to be successful this year," Hickey said. "Lisa had a good game for us, but aside from that, we really do play as well as we need to play. It's that Michell is hurt, that makes even harder."

The victory was the first against SFA in 13 tries for the Aggies. It continues the momentum from a third-place finish in the Keykey Tournament in California last weekend. A&M lost to Nevada, Vegas 58-51 before routing Roberts 87-48 in the consolation game.

"I didn't know we broke a record (by beating SFA for the first time) but it's always nice to do," Hickey said. "They're having a really good year and are playing a lot of games. They'll be a good team next day."
