NFC East

Cowboys, Redskins vie for playoff spot Sunday

United Press International

IRVING — As far as the NFC East is concerned the playoffs have already started, but when the Dallas Cowboys and Washington Redskins meet, it is usually like the playoffs anyway.

Those two old rivals will gather again Sunday at Texas Stadium in the second half of a double header that is overloaded with post-season implications.

Dallas and Washington both have 9-5 records and are tied for the NFC East lead with the New York Giants.

New York faces St. Louis (8-6) in the first game of the divisional twin bill and the outcome of that one will have a heavy impact upon the Cowboys and Redskins.

A win by New York over St. Louis would automatically put the Dallas-Washington winner into the playoffs as at least a wild card entrant.

A win by St. Louis, however, could leave the Dallas-Washington winner with some work left to do before wrapping up a post-season berth.

Whatever the outcome of the early game, however, the Redskins and Cowboys should put up a typically fanatical effort.

"This should be the same kind of game it always is," said Washington coach Joe Gibbs. "The attention from the press and fans fuels it and by the latter part of the week it has really escalated."

Washington has scored 108 more points than has Dallas this season, but somehow the Cowboys have won the same number of games as the Redskins.

"Dallas is very much like we've been," Gibbs said. "We've been the victim of injuries that have robbed us of consistency at various times."

"We've gotten to about the same place about the same way. They've had bad games, we've had bad games. They've played for a half and we've played for a half."

"After our first game (in which Washington won, 34-14) I said I'd be willing to bet Dallas would be there at the end and that was after we won and played as good as we could."

The Cowboys have been living almost entirely on defense for most of the season and to have a chance against the Redskins it would appear Dallas' defense will have to play an excellent game.

"(The Redskins) start out so fast you have got to be ready to stay with them," said Dallas coach Tom Landry. "It seems like they have had huge leads at the half lately."

"They are a great executing team. They have basically the same team that came together during the strike year and has been to two straight Super Bowls. They are a big play team and you've got to try to keep them from getting those big plays."

Each team has one major question mark coming into the contest.

For Dallas it is at quarterback, where first Gary Hogeboom and then Danny White have taken turns throwing interceptions.

White, who threw four interceptions in going the distance against Philadelphia last week, will get the start against the Redskins. But Landry came close to bringing in Hogeboom against the Eagles and may not wait too long to do so against Washington if his team gets off to a poor start.

For the Redskins, there is the case of John Riggins. He has played full time in only one of Washington's last four games as a result of a continually tight back. Riggins is expected to start, but the obvious question has to do with how long he can play.

Cardinals just don't like division leading Giants

United Press International

ST. LOUIS — Both coaches gave the customary pre-game praise to their opponent, but the St. Louis Cardinals and New York Giants players have a quite different outlook for Sunday's crucial NFC East contest.

"We just don't like the Giants," said Cardinal guard Terry Stieve.

"The feeling is mutual," said New York defensive end George Martin. "There's no love lost between us."

The heated rivalry may become even hotter during the Giants visit to Busch Memorial Stadium because of the importance of the game to the division standings and the NFC playoff picture.

"Both teams have a lot at stake," Martin said. "We don't want to lose and neither do they. Both teams need momentum going into the last game. Both teams are equally matched so it should be a great game."

The Giants hold a 9-5 record and are mired in a three-way tie with Washington and Dallas for the NFC East lead.

New York ends the season by entertaining New Orleans and victories in their last two games would give the Giants the division crown—their first title of any kind since winning the division in 1963.

The Cardinals are 8-6 and need to win their last two games to stay alive in the playoff chase. St. Louis, which ends the regular season in Washington, also would benefit from a Redskin victory over the Cowboys.

Dallas, which winds up the season in Miami against the Dolphins, would make the playoffs for the 10th consecutive season with a victory over Washington.

"It's such a competitive division," said Giants Coach Bill Parcells. "It's going to go down to the last week of the season."

"You want to stay involved until the last week of the season and be able to go down to the wire. We just have to play good and do a good job and let the chips fall where they may."

Both the Giants and Cardinals have been playing sound defense and that in itself could determine the outcome of Sunday's clash.

"Defense becomes important at this time of year," Parcells said.

Cardinals' Coach Jim Hanifan knows all about the Giants' All-Pro linebacker Lawrence Taylor and believes some other stalwarts of the New York defense may be overlooked.

"Besides Lawrence Taylor, whom everyone is aware of, the Giants have two excellent defensive ends in Curtis McGriff and Dave Herdison," Hanifan said.

"Jim Burt (nose tackle) in the middle is very quick and aggressive. They have an obviously solid linebacking corps and an aggressive secondary. (Bill) Currier is perhaps the most underrated strong safety in the league and (Terry) Kinard is like another inside linebacker from his free safety spot.

"They are a fine football team and it's going to be a great game."

The Giants defeated the Cardinals three weeks ago, 16-10. Parcells said he could see Sunday's game following the same low-scoring pattern.

"I expect a tough game so I see no reason why this week's game won't be the same way," Parcells said. "They have guys who can run the ball like Otis Anderson really well. It doesn't take a genius to figure out you'd better be prepared."

In last week's trouncing of New England, the Cardinals rushed for 220 yards, including 135 yards by Anderson, who went over the 1,000-yard mark for the fifth time in his six years in the league.

Hanifan, however, does not expect another 200-yard-plus performance from his rushing corps.

"It's unrealistic for any pro team to think they can run for 220 yards against anybody in this league," Hanifan said. "We've had degrees of success running against New York. I'd like to be balanced so we can do either run or pass and do them good."

The Cardinals runners appear ready for the physical confrontation with Taylor and his cohorts. Anderson and the five other backs showed up for Wednesday's practice wearing military garb.

Anderson said running backs coach Dick Jamieson went along with the charade when he entered the Cardinal offices and found his troops in camouflage clothing.

"Everybody jumped up," Anderson said. "He looked us over and then said, 'As you were, men.'"

"If those six guys are protecting the country, we're in trouble," Jamieson said.
