Horse from page 6

my heart, my first love still waited. And finally my chance came one day when my boyfriend called an old high school friend who now ran a stable.

My roommate and I drove out to Harmony Farms for our first lesson. The first few lessons went fine (except for an impromptu gallop on Laddie). After a while though, Harmony Farms began to fall apart. Sharon and I could never find the right tack to put on the horses. The reins on the bridles were knotted every time they broke, and sometimes, we even rode in a children's saddle (not too comfortable for anyone weighing over 55 pounds).

Harmony Farms closed down. But when it closed, I was happy because I had made a deal — I was going to lease Laddie.

Laddie was a fiery steed of uncertain age (somewhere between 28 and 30). He still jumped 3-foot fences, though, and would run away with you. His hair — more like fur — was four inches long because he had pituitary tumors, but I loved his furry, teddy bear body.

Finally, Laddie had to go back to his owner, and I bought myself a 6-year-old Thoroughbred named Sweet & Shy. Don't let the name fool you, Sweet & High is a better description.

Now, the fever has progressed into insanity. Horse crazy, they call me.

Recently some friends asked me who I loved more — my horse or my boyfriend.

"Well," I said, "considering I spend more time with my horse (three hours a day), I'd call it an even draw when my boyfriend is on the horse."

At least my boyfriend understands my love of horses. He rode for five years when he was younger and next semester, we're going to find a horse for him to lease.

Other friends don't understand as well. I called my best friend from high school and told her I'd bought a horse. "I thought you'd outgrown that," she said. No, horses are here to stay.
