

Search continues for missing pilot

HAGERMAN, N.M. — Ground teams searched the snow-covered, rolling hills of southeastern New Mexico Saturday for an Air Force jet trainer reported missing in a storm with one officer aboard.

The plane disappeared on a flight from Holloman Air Force Base near Alamogordo, N.M., to Carswell Air Force Base in Texas, said Lt. Col. Orlia Tate, Jr.

The snowy weather that hampered search efforts Friday night and early Saturday had improved, officials said, but the Air Force and the Civil Air Patrol were waiting for low clouds to lift before starting an airborne search, although a few civilian planes search the area.

The missing plane was a T-33 jet trainer based at Tyndall Air Force Base in Panama City, Fla., said Tate. It was piloted by 1st Lt. Michael S. Wiegand, 26, of Warminster, Penn., he said.

State Police Lt. James Sedillo said the search was focused about 15 miles east of the small town of Greenfield because a crew in a plane from Kirtland Air Force Base in Albuquerque flying over the area Friday night "spotted what they thought was a small fire on the ground, but couldn't get to it."

Police search for killers in Ft. Worth

FORT WORTH — A massive investigation into the deaths and disappearances of five young women from southwest Fort Worth since October may turn up more than one assailant in the cases, police said.

Acting Deputy Police Chief Charles Hogue, who is leading the 40 officers involved in the investigation, said officers have not ruled out the possibility of one attacker committing the series of crimes. But he said the different ways in which the women were slain made the possibility unlikely.

Police were "investigating it from both standpoints, individually or from the standpoint that two or three are by one person," said Capt. Ben Dumas, chief of the Criminal Investigation Division.

"I assure you all of them are not (one person)," he said. "That is my personal opinion."

The police task force is investigating the death or disappearance of nine women, most of them from the southwest or west sections of Fort Worth.

Three of the nine women were members of Broadway Baptist Church in Fort Worth, and detectives Friday obtained a 160-page list of the church's 2,800 members.

Church spokesmen, however, said they did not believe the women's deaths and their church affiliation were related.

Kathryn Jackson, 32, Regina Suzanne Grover, 21, and Lisa Griffin, 20, were members of the church.

Jackson was found strangled in the bathtub of her apartment Nov. 26, and Grover was found Dec. 23 under a Marine Creek bridge, minutes before her boyfriend's body was found in a nearby apartment.

Griffin, the latest victim, was found shot to death Wednesday night along railroad tracks in southwest Tarrant County.

Jackson was the only one of the three who was an active member, church officials said.

The remains of Cindy Heller, 23, were identified Wednesday after being found in a creek on the campus of Texas Christian University.

She was last seen Oct. 22 and an autopsy determined she had been strangled.

Sarah Kashka, 15 of Denton, disappeared from an apartment complex in Fort Worth and was found stabbed to death Dec. 31 in Dallas.

Catherine Davis, 23, vanished Sept. 30, the same day her garage apartment was destroyed by fire, and Angela Ewert, 21, disappeared Dec. 11.

She was last seen buying gasoline in the Wedgewood area of Fort Worth.

The Fort Worth task force also is investigating the deaths of Marilyn Hartman, 29, who was found strangled Oct. 30, apparently after surprising a burglar at her home, and Judy Herron, 34 of Colleville, strangled Nov. 13 by a suspected burglar who also attacked her son.

Police are unsure if a reported abduction Friday morning near a Fort Worth freeway is related to the deaths.

A man who helped a stranded woman motorist fix a flat tire said she got into a car minutes later with two men, one of whom may have been carrying a shotgun, police spokesman Doug Clarke said.

A reward fund for information into the women's death has been established at Southwest Bank in Fort Worth.

At least $6,500 has been donated to the fund, and Cindy Heller's parents have offered a $50,000 reward for information concerning the death of their daughter.

Fort Worth gunshop owners reported increased gun sales in the last few weeks to women seeking protection, and shipments of Mace sold out rapidly at one area store.
