Texans consider nuclear waste site

United Press International

TULIA — Panhandle residents got another chance Monday to tell U.S. Department of Energy officials their concerns about the possibility of putting a national high-level nuclear waste dump in Deaf Smith County.

DOE officials had a morning media briefing in Amarillo and have scheduled a 6:30 p.m. public briefing session in Tulia. A similar briefing is scheduled in Hereford Tuesday night with a Wednesday meeting planned in Austin.

The briefings are informational sessions only, say DOE officials who plan public hearings on the matter in Texas next month. Similar briefing sessions also were conducted last year when nine sites in six states still were under consideration.

DOE officials in December narrowed the sites to three top candidates for continued evaluation for the $25 billion project. The three sites are in Washington state, Nevada and Texas.

The proposed Texas site is a 9-square-mile plot about 16 miles north of Hereford and 8 miles southwest of Vega. Only one site would be chosen for the underground repository slated to start operating in 1998.

If located in Texas, the dump would be under the Ogallala Aquifer, the Panhandle's prime water supply.

Farming spokesmen have warned that contamination of the aquifer in Texas could harm the water supply for the seven other states also involved. Those states are South Dakota, Wyoming, Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas.

The Texas attorney general's office has filed a lawsuit in the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans challenging the government site selection process.

Gov. Mark White also has urged Hereford urging residents to write their congressmen in protest. He has suggested state water regulation about drilling through an aquifer might stall the DOE's plan to drill an exploratory shaft in Deaf Smith County.

Texas still recovering from storm

United Press International

SAN ANTONIO — San Antonio residents more accustomed to palm trees swaying in the sun than snow flying in blizzards stayed away from work and school Monday, still reeling from a deadly "storm of the century" that dumped a record 13.5 inches of snow on the Alamo City.

The snowstorm has caused at least five deaths throughout South Texas. City officials said damage from the storm will total into the millions, in part because of insurance claims resulting from damage to houses and cars.

Mike Sebald, a State Farm Insurance claims agent, reported more than 700 claims by midafternoon Monday, and Allstate Insurance Co. representatives said they had received a similar number of calls.

Each claim averaged about $1,000, Sebald said.

Police reported about 800 minor traffic accidents during the weekend storm. Traffic was light because freeways within the city were closed and businesses were urged by Mayor Henry Cisneros to remain closed Monday.

Cisneros said he was encouraging a return to normal activities Tuesday and praised business leaders for cooperating with his request to close during the storm. Highways were reopened Monday afternoon as skies cleared and temperatures rose to 49 degrees.

The snowstorm was the second in San Antonio in a month, but Cisneros said it would not influence the city to buy snow-removal equipment.

"If experts were to tell us we could expect changes in basic weather patterns, we might have to buy some snow equipment," he said. "I don't think there's any way we could justify it on the basis of this."

In the last 18 months, San Antonio has had a record-breaking freeze, its earliest ever heat wave with 100-degree temperatures in April, its driest summer on record and this week's record snowfall, the mayor said.

National Weather Service specialist Jim Ellis said the snowstorm was San Antonio's worst since the NWS began keeping records in 1885.

"It was the storm of the century," he said. "It broke every record."

The city's record snowfall for one day was 4.7 inches on Jan. 30, 1949. The record for a single winter was 7.4 inches in 1925-26.

"The storm and the snowfall was not a freak occurrence, but the amount of snow that fell was," Ellis said.

Storm-related fatalities included Paul Richter, 64, of San Antonio, who had a history of heart problems and died Sunday of an apparent heart attack while clearing his driveway of snow.

In Houston, Richard Anthony Petree, 25, died Sunday when his car was hit on an icy bridge by a vehicle driven by a Houston police officer.

Saramma George, 44, a nurse at Ben Taub Hospital in Houston, was killed Sunday on her way to work when her vehicle skidded on an icy bridge and struck a telephone pole.

Eugene Lewis, 56, apparently died of carbon monoxide asphyxiation in Corpus Christi after burning something in a small barbecue grill to keep warm in a car.

Dorothy Denise Thompson, 38, of Austin, was killed Saturday in a two-vehicle accident on icy streets.

In Juarez, Mexico, across the border from El Paso, police had not identified an elderly woman, believed to be a transient from the interior of Mexico, who apparently froze to death Saturday.

Public schools, city and county government and most businesses were closed Monday in San Antonio.

"It's like another vacation day because the mayor got on the TV and ordered everybody to stay off the roads," said officer Jerry Torralba of the Bexar County Sheriff's Office. "It's like a holiday."

In the San Antonio suburb of Hollywood Park, Fire Chief Matt Matter said most stores were closed Monday, but liquor stores were among those that opened.

"Everybody needs a little snow to freeze," he quipped.

In Del Rio, which received eight inches of snow, a man and his pregnant wife were rescued by police after their car broke down. Police said an officer took the woman to a hospital in time for a safe delivery.

Snow blanketed the Hill Country and parts of West and Central Texas Friday night, Saturday and Sunday. Hardest hit was an area south of line running from El Paso east to Midland through Austin to Bryan College Station.

In the Lower Rio Grande Valley which was ravaged by a vicious winter freeze last year, rain and higher temperatures caused ice to accumulate on vegetable fields and citrus groves. But agricultural officials predicted only minor crop damage.
