Tuition

Legislature differs over costs

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Legislative leaders back a broader state college tuition increase than proposed Tuesday by Gov. Mark White in his speech to a joint session.

"I think the students who are receiving the benefits of that education should play a more contributing role to the cost of that education," said House Speaker Gib Lewis.

White called for tuition hikes totaling $28.7 million, but he limited those increases to non-Texans and students in some graduate programs.

Texas in-state tuition is now among the nation's lowest at about $60 per semester, or about 5 percent of the actual cost of the education. That is not, some legislators said, a fair share.

"I think it's very unfair for the citizens of this state to be paying $4,000-$5,000 a year to educate a student when that student is contributing less than $400 a year," said Lewis.

Tuition was last raised in 1971, and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said, "I would hope the Legislature would pass a very substantial tuition increase. Out-of-state fees are so low, our own taxpayers are subsidizing their education."

In general, however, Lewis said White was on-target with many of his proposals — including hikes in "user fees."

Killeen Rep. Stan Schlueter, expected to be re-named chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, also predicted there will be considerable talk of across-the-board tuition hikes.

"He talked about out-of-state (students)," said Schlueter. "He talked about foreign (students). But he very specifically left out a general tuition increase. We've got to do it."

Schlueter favors tuition that would make students cover about 15 percent of the actual cost of education. He wants the increased phased in over several years.

A Texas Research League report issued this week ranks Texas 49th in the nation in non-resident tuition. A Texan who goes to a California state university pays $3,274 in annual fees and tuition, according to the report. A Californian could go to a Texas state college for less than half that amount.

Rep. Jim Rudd, expected to be re-appointed chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, agreed with Schlueter and Lewis that the tuition hike should touch all students, not just out-of-state and graduate students.

"I don't know that any governor has ever got everything he has asked for," said Rudd, D-Brownfield. "We will try to do what the governor asks to the point we can oblige him."

Rep. Lee Jackson, R-Dallas, said he did not see where White's proposed user fee hikes would bring in needed new money. The governor's program includes higher marriage license fees, state park fees and drilling permit fees.

"I think user fees are a fair way to balance the budget when they are covering the cost for services that are currently having to be paid for out of general tax revenues," said Jackson.

"If you start talking about raising user fees in order to generate revenue for the state, then that's another matter, and I think he'll run into some philosophical resistance."

Jackson said White's proposed fee hikes seem to come with proposals on how to spend the money — a "net wash" that means no new money.

"If you raise fees on day care centers and use the money to pay for more day care center inspectors, you haven't done anything to offset the budget deficit we have," Jackson said.

He said supporters of a fee increase bill approved in 1983 claimed that measure covered "everything they could survey in state government that needed to be raised except tuition."

Wichita Falls Sen. Ray Farabee agreed a tuition hike is needed.

"You can't have the best colleges and the best research in the country and have the lowest tuition any more than you can have the lowest gasoline tax and have the best highways," he said.

Black teen-ager on trial for perjury

Associated Press

DALLAS — Testimony began Tuesday in the state district court trial of a Dallas teen-ager accused of lying to a Dallas County grand jury about a controversial police shooting.

Victor Franklin, 18, was charged with aggravated perjury after he told a grand jury that Dallas police Cpl. Melvin Cozby struck Michael Todd Frost on the head with a nightstick before fatally shooting Frost on Nov. 7, 1982.

Brenda Frost, the shooting victim's sister, and Lonnie Leyuas also were indicted last year on felony charges accusing them of lying to the grand jury about the shooting.

The indictment of the three teenagers has outraged many leaders of the local black community who say the youths are victims of a court system that is insensitive to blacks.

Several dozen people have been picketing the courthouse since the trial's start Monday, some carrying signs that read "Free Victor Franklin."

Franklin is the first of the three teen-agers to be tried on the aggravated perjury charges. Each of the accused faces a maximum prison sentence of 10 years if convicted. Cozby did not testify before the grand jury, but has said he did not strike Frost with a nightstick, and shot him in self-defense.

Frost, 22, a convicted robber, died as a result of two bullet wounds in the chest. The perjury indictments are based on an autopsy that found no evidence Frost was hit on the head.

Black organizations claim the indictment against Franklin and the others is an attempt by the Dallas County district attorney's office to intimidate blacks from testifying in police shootings.

The Interdenominational Ministers Alliance, a group of mostly black ministers, has agreed to pay some of the legal costs for Franklin and the other two defendants.

Ted Watkins, president of the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, calls the trial "an explosive issue."

"The case should have been dismissed," Watkins. "I think it's going to polarize the community. It's going to set us back five to 10 years in relations between police and the minority community."

Defense attorneys and prosecutors agreed Monday to try the case before State District Judge Larry Baraka without a jury.
